Funding for state, local government jobs announced

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Ford announced today he has ordered the spending of $415 million to finance 85,000 public sector jobs in state and local governments.

Ford said he will ask Secretary of Labor Peter J. Brennan to immediately disburse $65 million to those communities in which unemployment is highest.

By the end of the month, Ford said, another $350 million will be made available under the Comprehensive Employment and Training Act.

Ford made the announcement to labor leaders and Senate and House members attending the second round of pre-economic summitry aimed at solving America's twin problems of inflation and recession. The session was part of a continuing series of meetings leading to the White House economic summit conference Sept. 27-28.

The President said the effect of today's actions will be to double the number of federally funded public service jobs — to 170,000 by this coming winter.

Ford said that in addition, $1.3 billion be available to state and local governments under already-budgeted manpower programs.

Ford noted the unemployment rate in August was 5.4 per cent and said that "we certainly cannot be complacent about any American lacking work" and "the present situation calls for full use of available tools and dollars."

His remarks were released in advance of delivery.

Ford emphasized there will be no controls imposed on wages and prices.

"To leaders of our labor unions, and to the captains of industry, I make a sincere appeal for restraint," said Ford. "And it must be self-imposed restraint."

"Settlements at the bargaining table are the responsibility of the participants as long as they respect the public interest."

"Cold and impersonal numbers and percentages cannot describe the impact on people's lives," Ford continued. "While everyone is hit by inflation, some are struck harder than others. I am thinking of families on low and moderate incomes, on older Americans who are struggling on modest pensions, and on young people whose experience with the employment scene may not generate real confidence in our economic system."

Ford said he is watching the unemployment rate very closely.

Firemen aid in rescue

Brenda Scroggins, 19, 308 West Peetis, is loaded onto a stretcher in front of her home about 9:30 p.m. Tuesday after she apparently suffered a relapse from a concussion she received Saturday. Her mother, Lula Scroggins, said that the girl was released from Bothwell Hospital earlier Tuesday. The Sedalia fire department was called to the scene to prevent the girl from choking by using a resuscitator. She was then taken by ambulance to the hospital where she was listed in good condition Wednesday morning.

President to weigh individual pardons

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Ford will weigh Watergate pardon requests on a case-by-case basis, Republican congressional leaders said today. Their statement, after a meeting with Ford, altered drastically the position announced by a White House spokesman less than 24 hours earlier.

Amid a wave of congressional protests over possible pardons, Sen. Hugh Scott, R-Pa., and Rep. John J. Rhodes, R-Ariz., met with the President for an hour and 45 minutes. After that session they issued a presidential statement, then discussed Ford's position on possible pardons for Watergate case defendants — and said no study of blanket pardons is being conducted.

That ran counter to the position disclosed Tuesday by Acting White House press secretary John W. Hushen, who had said: "The question of pardons is under study." Hushen had said the study involved all individuals accused or convicted of Watergate-related crimes.

While Hushen would not elaborate Tuesday, his announcement indicated that the White House was taking the initiative in considering pardons for Watergate defendants, and that a study involving all such cases was under way.

The Ford statement, read by Scott, emphasized that a study is conducted on any request made for the pardoning of any individual. Ford also said in that statement that no inference should be drawn about the outcome of a study in any specific case, and that his pardoning of Richard M. Nixon is not related to any other case "which is or may be under study."

Hushen insisted today that he had not misstated the President's position in his Tuesday announcement.

"Did you misspeak yourself yesterday?" a reporter asked.

"No," Hushen replied. "Did you misinterpret what I said?"

He would not discuss the matter further. "You've got the President's statement," he said. "That's all I'm going to say right now."

Scott said Ford has asked him to read today's pardon statement to reporters.

In it, the President said: "The announcement yeeterday by Mr. Hushen concerning a study of the entire matter of presidential clemency and pardons was prompted by inquiries to the White House press office concerning Mrs. John Dean's reported statement in reference to pardoning of her husband and similar public statements on behalf of others.

Five charged with conspiracy, fraud

WASHINGTON (AP) — Two former Penn Central Railroad officers and three other men have been indicted on federal charges of conspiring to misapply $4.2 million in Penn Central funds.

The Justice Department said today that the five also were charged with mail and wire fraud in a 23-count indictment returned in U.S. District Court in Philadelphia Tuesday.

The defendants are David C. Bevan, former chairman of the finance committee and chief financial officer of the now-bankrupt Penn Central Transportation Co.; William R. Gerstnecker, former corporate vice president of Penn Central; Fidel Gotz, a West German financier who lives in Vaduz, Lichtenstein; Joseph H. Rosenbaum, a Washington, D. C., lawyer, and his brother, Francis N. Rosenbaum.

Bevan and Gerstnecker were charged with actually misapplying the money.

The indictment charged that from July 1969 until about Nov. 1, 1970, the defendants conspired to misapply Penn Central funds through a scheme involving a $10 million loan Penn Central obtained from a German bank syndicate.

The defendants allegedly arranged the loan by falsely representing the intended use of the money and then diverting $4.2 million of the loan to Gotz through a dummy Lichtenstein company, First Financial Trust.

The Lichtenstein corporation also was named a defendant in the conspiracy indictment.

"Under the stated terms of such loan, the loan proceeds were to be used to finance the rehabilitation of rundown railroad cars and equipment used by the Penn Central Transportation Co. in its business," the indictment said.

Despite that statement, the defendants actually intended to transfer $4.2 million to Gotz or a corporation under his control "for his permanent use instead of applying such portion of loan proceeds for the stated and agreed upon purpose ...," the indictment charged.

Gotz was to obtain the money to satisfy a debt which he claimed the Penn Central Transportation Co. owed him, a claim the company disputed, the indictment continued.

The five men were charged with mail fraud and wire fraud for using telegrams and the mail in furtherance of the scheme, the grand jury alleged.

Stubborn lock finally opened

The Pettis County grand jury ran into a temporary roadblock Tuesday afternoon. It couldn't get into the jury room.

A contrary lock on the door of the jury room, located on the third floor of the courthouse, kept the 12 jurors out in the hall for about 10 minutes. They got into the room about 1:45 after Circuit Clerk Bill Lyles finally managed to unlock the door.

A locksmith was to work on the door Wednesday.

Only known survivors of plane crash total 13

CHARLOTTE, N. C. (AP) — An Eastern Air Lines jet carrying 78 passengers and a crew of four crashed today as it approached fog-shrouded Douglas Municipal Airport here. There appeared to be only 13 survivors.

Area hospitals reported treating 13 persons, including Stewardess Collette Watson and the jet's first officer, James M. Daniels Jr, both based in Atlanta.

"We are pretty assured that is all the survivors," said William Rawlings, the airline's sales manager for the Charlotte district.

Rescue officials set up a morgue at the National Guard Armory, near the airport.

Rawlings said Eastern ground personnel were in contact with the jet moments before it crashed.

"Our Eastern people had no idea anything was wrong. Everything appeared normal. There was fog this morning but the exact cause we do not know," he said.

The plane, a DC9-30, was Eastern Flight 212, which had left Charleston, S. C., on schedule at 7 a.m. It crashed at 7:33 a.m. about two miles from the Charlotte airport.

Shattered pieces of the plane's fuselage and wings were scattered over a wide area. Rescue workers and spectators who reached the scene before police blocked all traffic in a two-mile radius said the jet appeared to have exploded after landing.

Billowing clouds of smoke were seen miles from the crash site.

Mrs. Thomas Cox, whose home is less than a mile from the crash site, said she heard the jet as it passed her house. She said there were "three big booms when it went right over our house. I never heard it (a plane) sound like that before," she said.

"They brought one person down and put him on my porch. He was pretty badly burned. He lay there for a long time," Mrs. Cox said.

John McDowell, who lives near a ravine where the plane crashed, drove his farm tractor to the scene and used it to carry five persons to safety.

McDowell said the first thing he remembered was "the tremendous column of smoke. The second thing was the screaming and yelling and crying. It was hysterical."

Hospital site is rejected

The Missouri Division of Health has rejected the location for the proposed Sedalia Medical Center. The 13.22 acre site purchased by American Institutional Development is behind the Ramada Inn between Highway 50 and 16th Steet.

Director of the Bureau of Health Facilities, Gerald Wood, told The Democrat-Capital the site was rejected in July because it is not accessible by roads, is in an insect infested field and is too near an industrial complex that could expand and add to pollution of the area.

"We did send out a letter on the proposed site to the sponsors saying the site lacked proper utilities. Under those conditions the site would not be acceptable. This does not mean the site could not be improved," Woods said.

Since July, Woods said, the Division of Health has had only casual conversation about the proposed private hospital. Woods said no formal presentation of hospital plans has been made to the Division of Health.

"If we had the assurance that improvements would be made in the area, we would reconsider the plans," Woods said.

A spokesman for the project's financier, the Steele Construction Co., of Des Moines, said the project was in a "hold status."

Construction of the $3½ million 150 bed hospital was supposed to begin in August, with completion in 14 months. The Steele Construction Co. was to build the H-shaped hospital. Gene Steele, general manager of the company, was not available for comment.

Also unavailable was Sigmud Oxenhandler, president of American Institutional Development. Several attempts were made to reach him.

No one else involved with the hospital has been in contact with Oxenhandler recently, it was learned.

E.W. Thompson, who sold the land for the hospital, said he had not heard from AID in a long time. Thompson said he believes the entire project has been dropped.

The land transfer between Thompson and AID was handled by George Miller, a local realtor, who is also wondering what happened to the medical center.

"I've been in the dark about this thing," Miller said.

The last time he heard anything about the hospital was in July, he said.

New state Democratic leader pledges to keep party 'open'

JEFFERSON CITY, Mo. (AP) — A pipe-smoking lawyer and former legislator from southeast Missouri is the new Missouri Democratic party chairman.

James E. Spain, 39, unsuccessful candidate for attorney general in 1972, was elected without opposition Monday as the Democrats held their organizational meeting.

He succeeds David Donnelly of Lebanon, who served two years.

Spain pledged to work to keep the party "an open party."

"This is the majority party in this state," he said. "Every person in the legislature with a union card sits on our side of the aisle. Every black in the legislature sits on our side of the aisle."

"If I succeed it's because you are behind me," he told the 60-member state committee and about 50 other office holders and party workers.

The state committee re-elected Ina T. Shaffrey of St. Louis as vice chairwoman, state Rep. Orchid Jordan, D-St. Louis, as secretary, and Michael Fitzgerald of Kansas City as treasurer.

Former Gov. Warren E. Hearnes, a national Democratic committeeman, resigned from his at-large position on the state party's executive committee, saying he wanted to give someone else a chance. He was replaced by Benjamin Goins, the St. Louis city license collector.

Both Goins and Hearnes were among the eight delegates and two alternates selected by the state committee, with 54 members voting, to attend the national party's mid-term convention in Kansas City Dec. 6-8.

Hearnes suggested, with support from Sen. Thomas Eagleton, D-Mo., that it be the "sense" of the state committee that U.S. Sen. Stuart Symington, D-Mo., be the chairman of the 53-member delegation to Kansas City.

Symington did not attend the meeting.

State Sen. Raymond Howard, D-St. Louis, objected, saying the 53 delegates should elect their own chairman. Eagleton pointed out it was only an "expression of sentiment" and the state committee overwhelmingly supported Hearnes' recommendation on a voice vote.

Of the 53 delegates to Kansas City, 11 will be the Democratic representatives in Congress. Thirty-four delegates have been selected in congressional district caucuses.

Donnelly said John Inglish, Jefferson City lawyer, was appointed to mediate a dispute in the 2nd District, where a four-man slate was discarded by District Chairman Lewis Green and replaced by a slate of three women and one man — the next four highest vote getters.

Howard objected, saying the mediation job should be given to the state party's affirmative action committee.

Green had said the original slate was not representative of the district's population.

Green named Maryann Antoine, Miriam Blumer, Betty Lee and Lee Kling to replace state Sen. Robert A. Young, D-St. Ann; James Anderson, Louis Solari and Joseph A. Randazzo.

Another challenge on election procedure prompted an hour-long session by the credentials committee to name the six state committee members from the 2nd District.

Finally seated were Young, Solari, Marylen Melgaard, former state Rep. John Conley, Marge Klearman and Mary Hagen. Dropped from the list given to the secretary of state were Sidney Salomon Jr., Roger Sparks and Wilma Horsfall.

New Missouri GOP leader cites 'unity'

JEFFERSON CITY, Mo. (AP) — New state Republican party chairman Lowell McCusky says he believes the state party is now more unified behind Gov. Christopher S. Bond now than it was a year ago.

McCusky, who had received the support of Bond for the top committee post, was elected without opposition Tuesday, contrasting with the pre-balloting fight that marked the election of his predecessor Albert Rendlen last year.

Bond, who recently appointed Rendlen to the St. Louis Court of Appeals, encountered opposition in August 1973 when he picked the Hannibal attorney to succeed Richard Berkley of Kansas City, who had resigned.

Jackson County Counselor Stanley Christopher had expressed interest in the job, and when he was bypassed by Bond, he pressed his bid, forcing the governor to work for the needed votes to elect Rendlen. At the last minute, Christopher pulled out of the race, all but handing the party chairmanship to Rendlen.

"I hope that no opposition indicates the party is more strongly behind Gov. Bond," said McCuskey, who has served on the state committee six of the last eight years and has been Osage County prosecutor for the last 10 years.

The 44-year-old Linn attorney said he sees the state's first GOP chief executive in four decades as the party's titular head, but will bring up any party opinion differences between him and Bond for discussion.

Should such differences be strong, however, McCuskey said he "is willing to compromise if it will benefit the Republican party."

While acknowledging that President Ford's recent decision to pardon former President Richard Nixon and Ford's announced consideration of pardons for others involved in the Watergate scandal has eroded support for the Republican party in Missouri, McCuskey said he believed that loss was only temporary and would be regained by November, when the key election issue will be the economy.

He said no plans have been made by the state committee to ask Ford for campaign help to elect Missouri Republicans this fall—that decision being left to the GOP candidates at the top of the ticket.

The party's platform committee held a brief meeting to accept plank proposals which will be finalized into the fall platform by the platform steering committee on Sept. 20. Among suggested planks were endorsements of no-fault insurance legislation and the campaign finance measure on the general election ballot.

Nixon described as in 'deep depression'

WASHINGTON (AP) — A member of Richard M. Nixon's family says the former President is "in a deep depression" which was not lifted by the full, presidential pardon he received.

In addition, Nixon was said to be in physical pain from a phlebitis condition that had publicly been described as resolved last July.

This family member said that Mrs. Nixon and other relatives are worried about the condition of the ex-president.

The family member sought out a telephone interview on Tuesday night saying that "this is something someone should talk about," but asked not to be identified by name.

This person has seen and spoken with Nixon both before and since the President resigned Aug. 9 and talked with Nixon by telephone as recently as Monday night.

This family member knew of no specific physical problem other than the phlebitis, a blood clot which developed in Nixon's left leg just before his June trip to the Middle East.

"From the way reports are coming back (from Sen Clemente, Calif.), I just feel there is something more. It bothers me," this person said.

"It is enough to worry Mrs. Nixon. The worse it would be, the less he would talk about it.

"In other words, he's obviously in pain. He's obviously concerned about his health, but he's not talking about it."

This family member said, "Emotionally he's still way down and that's what bothers me even more.

"He is in a deep depression. I would hope the pardon would eventually lift that but I just haven't noticed that. There was no sudden elation."

Nixon's mind, however, remains acute, this person said. Since the resignation, the former president has discussed his financial affairs with this member of the family.

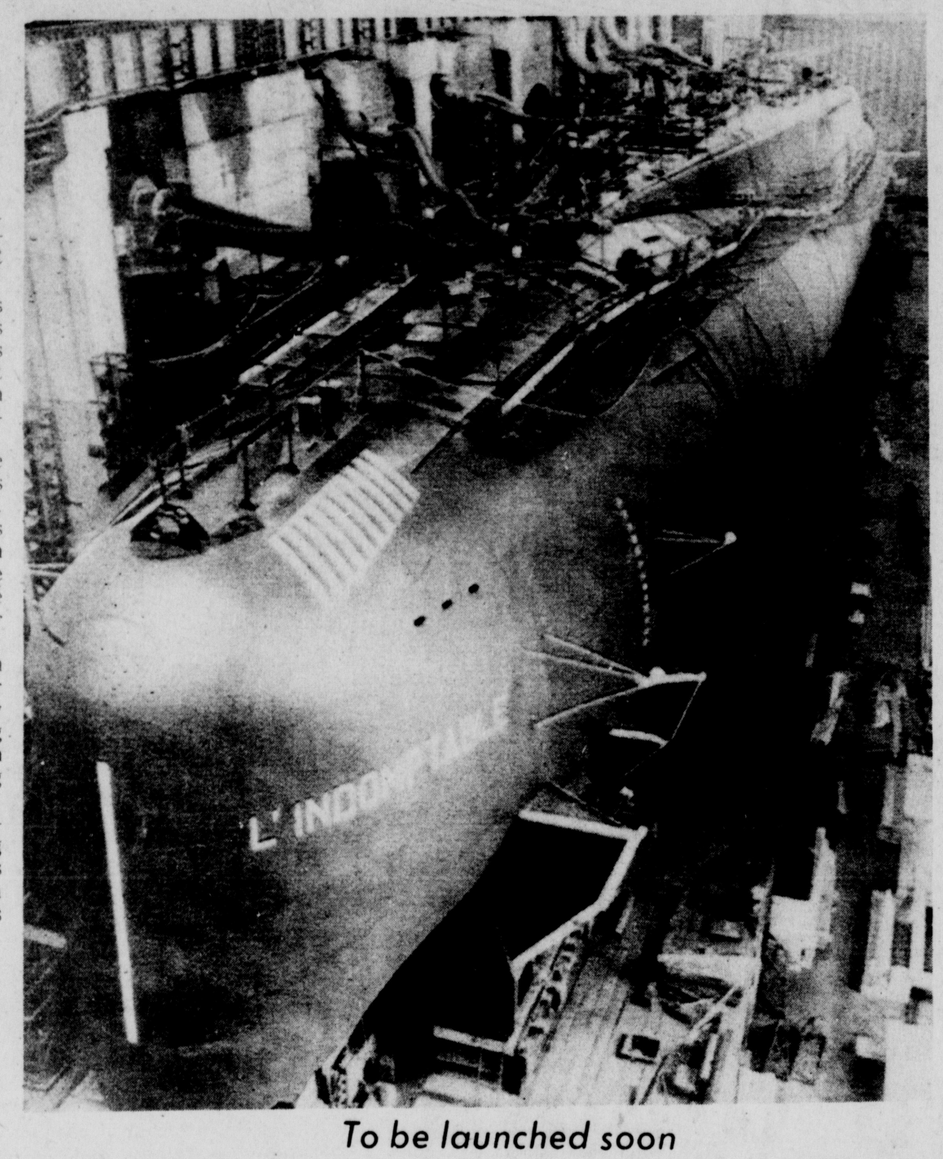

"I went over some things and he kept right up with them," this family member said. "He has a strong mind and it was as strong as ever. He grasped the specifics, recalled them and even caught me up on a few things."

Asked Nixon's feelings about the events that led to his resignation under fire, this family member recalled that Nixon had said the resignation was "abhorent to every instinct in my body."

"He is a fighter and he wanted to stay there, but his mind overcame his emotions. His mind and reason, his sense of values, his concern for the country, and his sense of realities won out in the end," the family member said.

"After he made his decision he had to live with that other feeling, though. That's a very tough thing to do. In talking with him, his consolation is in saying it was the right thing for the country.

"He has said that on numerous occasions and when going over it again he always comes back to that. It's going to be a long time before he finds peace for himself."

U.S. policy toward Cuba under review

WASHINGTON (AP) — Indirect signals from Havana that Fidel Castro may be interested in talking with the United States have inspired the Ford administration to begin an extensive review of U.S. policy toward the Carribean island.

The Cuban premier is thought to be more receptive to a dialogue with Washington in order not to remain totally dependent on the Soviet Union, which supplies his regime with some $1 million a day in aid.

The feelers are being conveyed sometimes through the occasional American visitors to Cuba and also by a less hostile posture generally by Cuba toward the United States.

Although no firm decision is imminent, the policy review could eventually lead to a reversal of the U.S. effort to isolate Cuba from the rest of the hemisphere.

The United States broke relations with Cuba in 1961, imposed a trade embargo in 1962, and joined with all other hemisphere nations except Mexico in 1964 in trying to isolate Cuba both diplomatically and economically.

However, six nations have since repaired relations with Havana. Panama has announced its intention to follow suit, and Colombia, Costa Rica and Venezuela have asked the Organization of American States to convene foreign ministers in Quito, Ecuador, in November to consider a reversal of the embargo.

At this point, Cuba seems to prefer reopening direct channels with Washington to re-entering hemisphere councils, including the Organization of American States.

If these talks develop, they could consider such topics as lifting travel restrictions that prevent most Americans from traveling to Cuba, trade barriers that also limit other countries which deal with Havana, or even an exchange of diplomats.

Since many of these anti-Cuban measures were written into the law, the administration would need Congressional support to accomplish a policy reversal.

Eagleton says pardon a 'bitter seed to swallow'

COLUMBIA, Mo. (AP) — President Ford's pardon for Richard M. Nixon was "a bitter seed for Americans to swallow," Sen. Thomas Eagleton, D-Mo., said Tuesday night.

The senator said he wasn't in favor of pardoning all other persons involved in Watergate until the court process is completed.

He said much truth about Watergate can still be learned through the trials of the other defendants.

Eagleton addressed about 200 persons at the opening of his Columbia campaign headquarters.

Civil Defense officials want to use stockpiles

JEFFERSON CITY, Mo. (AP) — A decade ago both the federal and state governments stockpiled nuclear fallout shelters with emergency food supplies, but now with the fear of nuclear war in the back of most peoples' minds, Civil Defense officials throughout the state are looking to put the foodstuffs to a more practical use.

"Actually, very little of it is in the way of what we call food, you and I," says Col. James H. Bash, state coordinator for disaster planning and operations. "It's mostly crackers and some hard candy. Just enough to sustain life on a minimal basis."

But Bash and other state officials are hopeful that millions of tons of the foodstuffs, currently stored in fallout shelters around the state, can be sent to Bangladesh to aid the throngs of starving people of that small Asian country.

According to Neal Plantz, state shelter officer, problems have arisen in the development of a collection plan for the supplies by the federal General Services Administration.

The GSA initially said it would collect any stockpiles over 10 tons, a quanitity that four areas—Columbia, Jasper County, Kansas City and Richmond Heights — have on hand and are willing to give up, he says. But now the federal government may not accept quantities of less than 20 million tons, and Plantz says none of the areas in Missouri have such supplies on hand anymore.

The program for sending the foodstuffs to Bangladesh was developed about three months ago by the U.S. State Department, Bash says, and since then state Civil Defense officials have been contacting CD leaders on the local level.

Should fallout shelters be called into use for some reason in the future, the plan now, Bash says, is for persons going to the shelters to bring the needed items with them.

Whether the federal government eventually picks up the stockpiles in Missouri or not, Bash says his office is urging local Civil Defense directors to "comb their local areas and put the supplies to good use" if they decide to unstock the shelters.

The cracker-hard candy supplies have a shelf-life of about five years, he points out, toward the end of which they get an odor which makes them no longer palatable.

But even though most stockpiles have run through their five-year lifespans and are not being replenished, Plantz says some local Civil Defense officials are still holding on to them "because they fear they might need them."

According to Platz, even when the officials are told the supplies have the unpalatable odor, they merely reply, "It may smell bad, but if you're hungry, you'll eat it."

Gold speculator latest victim of marketplace

NEW YORK (AP) — It's really tough to make a speculative buck in the marketplace.

That wisdom, which invariably is developed after the fact, has been the lament of broken speculators ever since man developed trade, but it has become a dirge sung by a million-voice choir in the past decade.

The wail of the goldbug is now heard in the land, the latest victim of that diabolical tendency of the market to collapse without warning. Who said gold doesn't deteriorate? Owners of gold stocks will claim otherwise.

Long promoted as the only investment vehicle that could withstand the malaise of world economies, gold stocks this week turned out to be no different than others, they plunged, some as much as 20 per cent in one day, Monday.

Homestake Mining shrunk $10.25 to $45. Campbell Red Lake fell $8.50 to $30.12. ASA Ltd. lost $10.37 to $79.25. Dome Mines declined $8.25 to $47.12. And International Mining declined $2 to $9.50. All were heavily traded.

Why such devastation occurred isn't entirely clear. An advisory service did send a bearish report to customers, claiming that possible tax increases and inflation were fouling the gold investment climate. But there was more to it than that.

As in almost every fad or mass craze, there is a beginning and an end. Whether or not this is the end of the gold stock boom cannot be forecast, but what obviously happened is that many stockholders declared it was the end for them.

That is the way the end always begins. It has happened in commodities of almost all kinds, in "glamor" stocks, in mutual fund shares. And it probably will occur sometime in the government securities market, where thousands now seek refuge.

In the beginning of a fad a few people claiming to be in the know lead the way. Other insiders and a few outsiders join. The word goes round and the mass of people jump aboard. The newest fad has thus matured.

Parents planning to boycott schools

BOSTON (AP) — Thousands of white parents are expected to keep their children home on Thursday when Boston public schools open under a court-ordered integration plan which requires the busing of 18,200 pupils.

Even the parents of pupils who are not scheduled to be bused say they will keep their children out of school in sympathy for those who are. Officials say some schools will be virtually empty.

Fran Johnnene, one of the boycott leaders, predicts that about 40 per cent of Boston's 94,000 public school pupils will skip first-day classes. Other antibusing spokesmen, such as City Councilor Thomas P. O'Neil, predict an even higher figure.

The integration plan was ordered by U.S. District Court Judge W. Arthur Garrity. He said the city's schools were segregated both through housing patterns and official manipulation. Of the total number of pupils to be bused, 8,500 are white and 9,700 are black.

Violent opposition to busing by many parents manifested itself on Monday when Sen. Edward M. Kennedy was booed and splattered with a tomato when he attempted to speak to an angry crowd of some 8,000 to 10,000 demonstrators in front of Boston's federal building.

The Home and School Association, similar to the Parent-Teacher Association, has led the drive to thwart the integration plan. Its strategy is to arouse enough opposition to force officials to give up on integration.

Weather alert units placed within city

A total of 14 weather tone-alert receivers have been installed at various locations in the city, Sedalia-Pettis County Civil Defense director Jerry Iuchs announced.

State Fair Community College, Bothwell Hospital and the Pittsburgh-Corning Corp. plant each have one receiver. Eleven of the instruments were installed in the various public school buildings in the city and the board of education office, Iuchs said.

The receivers, by which the police department will be able to alert the locations with the press of a button in case of emergency, cost $204.30 each. Half of the cost of each receiver was funded by a combbned state and federal matching grant. This grant did not apply to the receiver purchased by Pittsburgh-Corning.

Iuchs indicated that plans are currently underway to encourage county schools and additional businesses to secure the receivers.

Sex before marriage unacceptable in China

Here's another column on my visit to The People's Republic of China as a member of the American Medical Association's delegation.

Ann Landers is asking the questions, for a change, and the answers are being supplied by physicians, nurses, shop clerks, hotel employees, interpreters — anyone who can understand my frightful Chinese. Imagine my embarrassment when I butchered several sentences of Mandarin and a physician responded in perfect English, "It isn't necessary to speak in Chinese. I spent two years at the University of Chicago."

My question to a 35-year-old Chinese professional woman (married), one of the most attractive and articulate people I met on the entire trip: "I understand there is very little premarital sex in your country. Is this true?" Answer: "Yes. And there are good reasons for it. Nearly half of our country's population is under 30 years of age. This means 400 million of our people have been reared under Mao's teachings. To keep the birth rate down, the Chairman has suggested 25 as a good age for a woman to marry, and 28 for a man. Sex before marriage is considered highly immoral and completely unacceptable. Our young people are taught at a very early age that all their time and energy must be spent in self-improvement, study or work."

Question: "But how do they keep their normal sex drives under control? Isn't it natural for members of the opposite sex to become attracted to one another?" Answer: "A child whose thoughts are conditioned from birth grows up to believe as he has been taught. We teach our young children that sex before marriage is a shameful and disgraceful thing. A young couple who strays from these teachings is looked down upon by their peers. The Chairman's motto is, 'Serve the people,' and young couples who spend their time amusing themselves with sex are not serving the people. They are being selfish, and they are taking time and energy from study and work."

Question: "Are you saying there is NO premarital sex in The People's Republic of China?" Answer: "Such a statement would be ridiculous. In a country with 800 million people, there must, of course, be exceptions. But I am sure we have less sex before marriage as well as OUTSIDE of marriage, than any country in the world. Adultery is quite uncommon. It is considered 'boo-how' (very bad) by relatives, friends and fellow workers."

Question: "From my conversations with both women and men here, I'm beginning to get the impression that there is also less sex inside of marriage. Am I right?" Answer: "Probably, as compared with other countries. And there is a reason for this. In Old China, concubines and prostitutes were part of the culture. They provided sexual entertainment. Wives were not expected to be sexy. They were for childbearing. Today, concubines and prostitutes are abainst the law and most wives look upon sex as their mothers did. Also, they are too hard-working to be sexy. After a woman has produced one or two children, she feels she has done her duty. There are many exceptions, of course, but most Chinese women consider sex a chore."

I replied, "You have 800 million people in your country. This suggests to me that SOMEBODY around here must be interested in sex." Answer: "Surely you know a large family is not proof of sexiness. It is more often a sign of poverty and ignorance. That population figure of 800 million reflects what went on BEFORE our intensive family planning program. Chairman Mao has decreed that our future will be very different from our past, and you will se that he is right."

Tennis boom bends elbows

Dear Dr. Lamb — My doctor is an orthopedic surgeon. He told me I have "tennis elbow," technically called tenosynovitis. I want to know if he is right. The outer knuckle or knob on my elbow hurts when I grip with my arm completely extended straight. If I strike this knob against anything it hurts so bad that I almost cry. In a position such as the one I put my arm in to write, my arm goes to sleep. Of course, there are other positions that do the same thing. There is a continuous ache in my elbow joint.

My doctor gives me an injection of corticosteroids about every three months. I'm a pipefitter. He tells me that an operation may not help because manual labor such as my work would probably produce a recurrence.

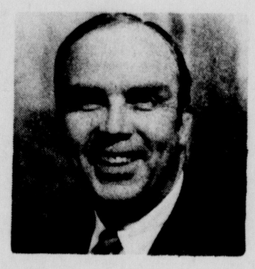

Dear Reader — No doubt your doctor is correct. Tennis elbow can occur whenever the elbow joint is subjected to repeated strain and jarring. With the boom in tennis this condition is being seen with far greater frequency.

Your arm has three main bones: the humerus, between the elbow and the shoulder, and the radius and ulna between the elbow and the hand. The two lower bones are held in place at the elbow hinge joint by a partial capsule of ligaments. These ligaments are attached directly to rough surfaces and knobs on the bones. This joint was not made for excessive jarring. As with other joints, if it is used in an unnatural way, it can become injured, setting up an inflammation. A baseball pitcher may develop a "pitcher's elbow" or a ballet dancer damage to her ankles.

The hand can be rotated back and forth by the twisting of the two lower bones. When striking an object if the elbow joint, bones and ligaments are not in the right position, it will be more injurious. You know that if you pick up a club and hold one end while hitting something with the other end you won't feel much of a jar. BUT, hit something about half way along the length of the club and you will feel it. I suspect your occupation has been a factor in putting a strain on your elbow joint. In the tennis player it is often that backhand. It is important to know if there is any underlying problem that contributes to the disorder. Both gout and arthritis are sometimes a factor. Getting older, apparently with bone changes, is a factor. In fact tennis elbow occurs most often in the older athlete, particularly those who play once a week.

Treatment ideas vary. Surgery seldom helps. Medicines to relieve pain are often used, that includes cortisone injections, aspirin and other measures. Rest, heat, massage, ultrasound and whirlpool baths are all useful in some cases.

The best approach is to prevent the recurrent injury. Tennis players may rest the arm. Most don't like that solution. For tennis it is important to learn to do it right. Professionals seldom have this problem, but some do (including both Arthur Ashe and Tony Roche). It often means a poorly controlled backhand. Exercises to strengthen the forearm muscles, learning the proper grip, and hitting the ball correctly remove that abnormal jar to the elbow joint. Then happily, in some instances, the tennis elbow disappears for no good reason but to the satisfaction of everyone involved. (NEA)

Mind your money

Bright ideas may be costly

By PETER WEAVER

At some time or other we've all had big ideas about selling some gadget and making a lot of money.

We think our idea for a two-handed, rotary "swizzle mop" for the floor chores is a stroke of genius. All we have to do is sell it to some manufacturer and away we go — the money will just roll in.

If you're thinking along these lines, watch it. You're a candidate for getting plucked by idea hucksters. Perhaps you've seen the fetching ads aimed at "Amateur Inventors" which promise to "Make Money on Your Ideas." All you have to do is write in to see how others "made fortunes."

You send in your idea for an estimate of your chances. Almost without fail, you get an answer that says your idea "shows great promise." You're asked to "RUSH" in your check for $150 to $200 so the idea promoter can get working on your invention to sell it to manufacturers. You keep getting "progress reports" and, of course, requests for more money.

One Federal Trade Commission attorney, who is investigating the whole invention marketing business, says the average total fee these promoters get out of armchair inventors is $1,500. Occasionally, an amateur inventory will get back a few dollars in "royalties" but almost no one gets all the fee money back and makes a profit.

After its investigation, the FTC might come up with a trade regulation rule which would require invention hucksters to disclose to prospective clients their success-failure ratio. With this kind of disclosure, hopeful inventors would see that the chances of developing their idea, getting it patented and eventually marketed so it would make money are similar to those of winning a lottery.

If sending your hot idea off to a mail-order promoter is risky, then how should you go about selling it? It's almost impossible to get a major manufacturer to even look at your idea. Most of them have many of their own new products that haven't been marketed yet and they fear legal snarls if they're already working on something that's similar to your invention.

Your best bet is to get professional help from a patent attorney or agent. Both are registered by the U.S. Patent Office and can help you decide whether it's worth going ahead with the expensive patent process. It costs from $1,000 to $1,200 to get a fairly uncomplicated idea patented. You need plenty of consultation (at $40 to $60 an hour) plus a patent search to see if anyone else has a patent on your idea (you'd be surprised how many people thought of your idea years ago) and then you need to apply for a patent and, possibly, go through hearings with patent examiners.

Woman is released in shooting case

A Sedalia woman who allegedly shot her husband was released from the city jail Wednesday after Pettis County Prosecuting Attorney Gary Fleming decided an assault charge against her could not be filed.

Mrs. Helen Marie Foster, 53, 413 East Broadway, allegedly shot at her husband, Jerry Paul Foster, twice with a .22 caliber automatic pistol, according to police. Foster called an ambulance after being shot in the left knee and was taken to Bothwell Hospital where he was treated and released with a flesh wound.

A police spokesman said an argument developed between Mr. and Mrs. Foster when Mrs. Foster allegedly shot twice at her husband. Only one bullet struck Foster. The other hit the floor, according to Fleming.

"I'm 99 per cent sure no charges will be filed against her," Fleming said Wednesday morning. He said he still plans to talk to Foster.

"If she shot him without provocation then she should be charged. If she shot him in self-defense then she shouldn't be charged," Fleming said.

Mrs. Foster was held for investigation for about 20 hours before she was released.

Soviet planes said shipped to Egyptians

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — The newspaper Beirut reported today that the Soviet Union has supplied Egypt with 50 MIG23 fighter-bombers, its most advanced operational warplane.

A Cairo correspondent for the paper said official sources told him several Egyptian airports were closed for three hours Monday to receive the MIG23s, and that "numerous Russian military transport planes also landed other modern arms and equipment."

The airlift, Beirut said, ended a Soviet ban on shipments of arms and military spare part to Egypt imposed after the Arab-Israeli war last October.

The report by the Iraqi-backed paper was not carried by any other Arab newspaper, and there was no comment from Cairo.

In Amman, Jordanian Premier Zaid Rifai denied reports circulating in London that his government sold 100 of its British Hawker Hunter jets, 50 of its British Centurion tanks and a British missile system to South Africa. The British Foreign Office said Tuesday that it was investigating the reports, which also said South Africa sent the planes on to Rhodesia.

Britain bans shipments of all British war materials to both South Africa and Rhodesia because of their racial policies.

Meanwhile, Israel officially accused Syria of war crimes in its treatment of Israeli prisoners captured during the October war.

The Israelis sent documents to the United Nations General Assembly and Security Council, compiled from testimony by 65 returned POWs. They alleged that wounded prisoners were murdered, other POWS beaten and tortured, and Syrian soldiers shot fliers parachuting from disabled aircraft or trying to surrender.

Egyptian President Anwar Sadat indicated in a speech in Port Said he planned to reopen the Suez Canal to world shipping even if Israel refuses to pull its troops further back in the Sinai Peninsula.

However, he also said that if Israel does not give up all Arab lands it captured, "we will go to war again."

Release of prisoners is meeting topic

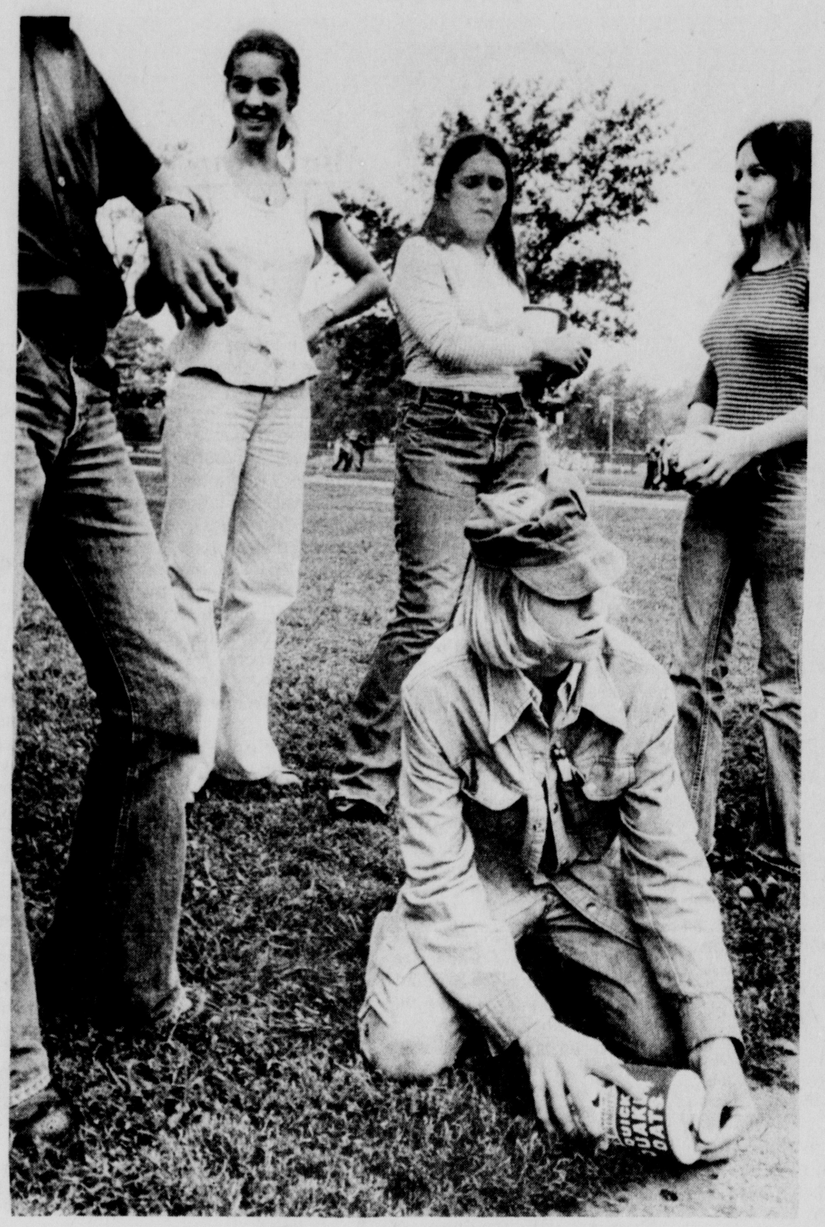

NICOSIA, Cyprus (AP) — The leaders of the Greek and Turkish Cypriots meet today to discuss a Red Cross proposal for the release of more than 4,000 prisoners of war.

It will be the third meeting between President Glafcos Clerides, the head of the Greek Cypriot government, and Vice President Rauf Denktash of the Turkish Cypriots, since the cease-fire was signed Aug. 16.

Prodded by U. N. Secretary-General Kurt Waldheim, Clerides and Denktash agreed to meet every Friday to discuss "humanitarian issues." A U. N. spokesman said the fact that they were holding a special meeting to discuss the prisoners was a "good indication" that the two Cypriot communities were solving one problem resulting from the recent war.

The International Red Cross reported the Greek Cypriots are holding 3,314 Turkish Cypriots prisoner while 1,164 Greek Cypriots are detained in Turkish-occupied territory.

Clerides and Denktash agreed last Friday to a prisoner exchange, but later Denktash charged that Clerides was stalling the transfer by refusing to let Turkish Cypriots whose homes were in the Greek zone move to the Turkish zone.

Oatmeal camera

Students from a Smith-Cotton High School photography class moved outside Wednesday morning with "pin-hole" cameras they made from oatmeal cartons. The cameras used photographic paper instead of film and required 10-second exposures. In place of a lens, a pin-hole camera uses a small opening for the exposure. (Democrat-Capital Photo)

Carey easily wins New York primary

By CARL P. LEUBSDORF
AP Political Writer

Rep. Hugh L. Carey scored a smashing victory in New York's Democratic primary for governor, while nine governors and five senators won easy renomination in the last big round of primaries to pick candidates for the Nov. 5 elections.

Although Tuesday was generally a good day for incumbents, three congressmen were defeated: Democrats Bertram L. Podell of New York, who goes on trial for perjury today, and Robert O. Tiernan of Rhode Island, and veteran Republican Glenn R. Davis of Wisconsin.

In the major races in 13 states and the District of Columbia, however, there were few upsets.

In Maryland, former state Sen. Louise Gore scored an unexpected victory in the Republican primary for governor over Rep. Lawrence W. Hogan, the first GOP member of the House Judiciary Committee to support impeachment of former President Richard M. Nixon.

Miss Gore will be a distinct underdog in November against Democratic Gov. Marvin Mandel, who easily won renomination. Other Democratic governors who won renomination were Reubin Askew of Florida, Wendell R. Anderson of Minnesota, Patrick J. Lucey of Wisconsin and Thomas P. Salmon of Vermont.

Also victorious were four Republican state executives, Govs. Francis W. Sargent of Massachusetts, Meldrim Thomson Jr. of New Hampshire, John Vanderhoof of Colorado and Malcolm Wilson of New York.

Wilson was unopposed for nomination to a full term in the post he assumed when Nelson A. Rockefeller resigned last December.

The only incumbent senator with primary opposition, Republican Charles McC. Mathias Jr. of Maryland, easily won renomination.

And Sens. Barry Goldwater, R-Ariz., Jacob K. Javits, R-N.Y., Peter H. Dominick, R-Colo., and Gaylord Nelson, D-Wis., were all unopposed for nominations to new six-year terms.

Plan would lower prices, upgrade beef

WASHINGTON (AP) — American Consumers could have leaner beef at lower cost under a regrading plan announced by the Agriculture Department.

The department unveiled proposed new rules Tuesday that would reduce the fat content required for the higher grades of beef.

The effect would be to increase by up to 20 per cent the amount of beef that would qualify as "choice," the grade most commonly sold at supermarkets.

The primary aim of the new rules, which are subject to revision before taking effect in December, is to ensure greater uniformity within the grading system, the department said.

"I don't think that even an experienced taste panel would be able to pick up the difference" after the change, said USDA Livestock Director John C. Pierce. Steak and hamburger may be a bit less juicy but would probably be more nutritious because of less fat.

The change, long sought by cattlemen, would encourage growers to market leaner beef, thereby cutting production costs by reducing the time cattle would have to be fed expensive grains on ranches and at fattening-up feedlots.

The American National Cattlemen's Association estimated that as much as $22 a head in grain costs could be saved by cutting feedlot time by two weeks.

While he could make no guarantees, Pierce said lower production costs "could be reflected in lower prices at the retail levels."

Electric rate recommendations are expected

WASHINGTON (AP) — Treasury Secretary William E. Simon, who has urged removal of federal price regulation over oil and natural gas, was expected to recommend rate increases for electricity as well in a meeting with state regulators.

Simon and other federal officials had scheduled the meeting with state public utility commissioners behind closed doors today but agreed to let newsmen and consumer representatives attend after consumer groups protested the secrecy.

Administration officials have agreed with electric utility companies that the utilities need rate increases to cover the rising cost of fuel, but utility rates are regulated by state commissions, not the federal government.

With the National Association of Regulatory Utility Commissioners (NARUC) due to meet in Hershey, Pa., this week, federal officials evidently decided to invite them to Washington for some friendly persuasion.

"The government will discuss financial problems facing the electrical utilities industry and will encourage them (state utility commissioners) to expedite the pass-through of higher costs," said a Treasury Department source.

Soliciting charge faces local woman

A Sedalia woman was arrested Tuesday afternoon and charged with soliciting for the purpose of prostitution, police reported Wednesday.

Lenora Scroggins, 22, 308 West Pettis, was arrested after she allegedly solicited an off-duty police officer near her home.

It was reported that after the officer informed her that he was a policeman, she attempted to run from him. The officer then chased her and made the arrest.

She was released on a $1,000 property bond for court Sept. 27.

In other police news, Johnny Knott, sales manager of Pat O'Connor Chevrolet-Buick-GMC, 1300 South Limit, reported to police that a drive shaft was stolen over the weekend off a 1974 Chevrolet parked on the company's lot. The value of the missing item was set at $75.

A soda vending machine at the Holiday Inn, 32nd and Limit, was reported vandalized. No damage estimate was made, but an undetermined amount of money was taken.

Democrats select Barr as nominee

Gerald R. Barr

The Pettis County Democratic Committee Tuesday night elected Gerald R. Barr, Route 4, as its candidate for county auditor. Barr received 36 votes. His opponent, Ed Smith, gained 23 votes.

Barr, 30, was born in Marshall and has lived in Sedalia for 25 years. He received a two-year accounting certificate from State Fair Community College and has had bookkeeping experience in high school and college. He currently is a bookkeeper at the Sedalia Veterinary Center.

Smith studied taxation and accounting at the University of Missouri, Kansas City, and completed a business course at the University of Missouri, Columbia. He is a board member of the Bank of Ionia and a former executive for Home Building Corporation.

Barr will oppose Frank Wagner, the Republican candidate, in the November general election. The office of auditor was created by Pettis County's elevation to Second Class status, effective Jan. 1.

Norris' condition listed 'critical'

Dr. T. J. Norris, 1110 South Warren, former superintendent of Sedalia schools, was listed in critical condition late Tuesday at Bothwell Hospital.

Norris, who has a history of heart problems, entered the hospital Monday morning. He was under intensive care Tuesday night, it was learned.

A report of his condition Wednesday was withheld at the request of the family.

Official to view MU demonstration

COLUMBIA, Mo. (AP) — A demonstration by the Legion of Black Collegians scheduled today on the University of Missouri-Columbia campus will be watched by a representative of the U.S. Justice Department.

John Perez of the Justice Department office in Kansas City, said Tuesday the observer will watch for possible violations of the 1st Amendment as the blacks demonstrate in support of demands they have made on the university administration.

The demonstration will include a speech by Hosea Williams, a leader of the Southern Christian Leadership Conference.

Charges facing two men increased during a hearing

Two men charged with second degree burglary and stealing Aug. 17 at the Missouri State Fairgrounds were bound over to Circuit Court Wednesday morning.

Gary Don Eaton, 20, and Gale Alan Rucker, 23, both of Maryland Heights, Mo., were originally charged with tampering with a motor vehicle. That charge was raised to the more serious charge Wednesday morning during their preliminary hearing in Magistrate Court.

They are accused of breaking into the motor home of Jerry Baumgardner, St. Charles, while at the State Fair Aug. 17.

Trooper Ron Davis, who investigated, said a checkbook taken from the mobile home was found nearby by another mobile home owner.

The two are being held in Pettis County jail on bonds of $2,500.

Schedule a trial in drug case here

Scott K. Rusecki, 19, Bristol, Wisc., was bound over to Circuit Court Wednesday on charges of selling a controlled substance, an amphetamine, at the Ozark Music Festival July 15.

Missouri State Highway Patrolman Mack Nations, an undercover agent, testified that Rusecki had sold him the substances for $10, or "five dollars a hit." Nations said he paid for the substance with money supplied by the Highway Patrol.

Frank Durham, a Highway Patrol chemist, testified the substance was methylenedioxy amphetamine, commonly called MDA.

Durham and Nations said the amount was in two capsules. Rusecki is in the county jail, in lieu of $3,000 bond.

Nears end of Phase III

The Harry S. Truman Dam and Reservoir, near Warsaw, is nearing the close of the third phase of its construction, Ron Swanby, cost and safety coordinator for Guy F. Atkinson Co., said Tuesday. Swanby said that the appearance of the dam will not change noticably until it becomes operational. Only about 60 workmen remain at the dam site and most remaining work is minor. At left, a worker sands a concrete slab behind a turbine opening. Right, another workman hangs some 126 feet above the ground as he sands the dam's wall. (Democrat-Capital Photos by Bill Zieres)

Varied discussion by school board

Sedalia School Board members discussed a variety of topics at their regular meeting Tuesday evening, ranging from enrollment this school year to a collapsed septic tank at Striped College elementary school.

Total enrollment throughout the system is down by about 100 students, administrators reported. Director of Elementary Education P.A. Sillers revealed that elementary schools have 2,497 students enrolled, with increases seen only at Jefferson and Hubbard Schools.

Larry Smithson, junior high school principal, reported enrollment is down about 20 from last spring to the current 902. Smithson noted that class sizes have also been reduced through rearranged scheduling. He added junior high class size is "approaching an ideal."

Kem Keithly, new principal of Smith-Cotton High School, said there are about 10 to 15 more students at the high school this year, with an enrollment figure of 1,629. Several board members raised questions concerning scheduling and particular class sizes and Keithly indicated that some adjustments are anticipated.

Assistant Superintendent of Schools Earl Finley pointed out that "1,600 kids is still overcrowding the facilities." It was noted that with limited room space and personnel, ideal class sizes in some courses are difficult to achieve.

Charles McNealy, maintenance supervisor, submitted a report through Dr. Allan Henningsen, superintendent of schools, that the septic tank at Striped College School has collapsed and needs to be replaced. Henningsen revealed that one estimate of the needed work exceeded $1,000. The board directed McNealy to solicit bids from suitable local firms. The situation was not labeled an emergency but as something needing attention in the near future.

Woodrow W. Garrison, city building inspector, this week reminded school officials that a new temporary occupancy permit needs to be obtained for continued use of the junior high. The architectural firm of Sammons and Buller has not yet declared the structure officially completed. Discussion about the building included what work remains to be done on the outside front and problems with the gymnasium floor. Henningsen reported he has been in contact with Don Buller concerning the work in the past week.

The sale of the house built by the building trades class at 11th and Sylvia for $36,250 to O.R. Catron, Jefferson City, was announced. Catron, who plans to move here in the future, submitted the high bid of $34,500. The board ruled that the lowest price it could take on the house was $36,250 and Catron agreed to meet that figure. "The couple bought a very well-built home," Glenn Kell Jr., board president, commented. The bids and related ruling came during an executive session.

Overcrowded conditions on two bus routes were discussed and Sillers said he plans to ride the buses to determine what problems exist. Henningsen said there is always a problem when bus service is contracted because the firms try to provide the service with a minimum cash expenditure. Sillers added that the buses used here are in good condition.

The board voted to approve a statement in support of the Sept. 24 bond issue election for State Fair Community College. The statement points out the significant advantages of expanded SFCC facilities to Sedalia School District patrons and urges voters to approve the 15-cent levy increase involved in the election. The statement will be mailed to all voters by supporters of the bond issue. The statement will be signed by each of the board members and Henningsen.

The board voted to begin a twice-monthly program of school inspections and to commend maintenance crews for the work done during the summer.

Henningsen revealed that Civil Defense monitors have been placed in all the schools. The monitors are tuned to the frequency used for emergencies.

In other business the board voted to:

- Increase the cost of adult lunches by 10 cents at all attendance centers. The increase comes in line with federal school lunch policies and creates a 20-cent difference between student and adult prices. The prices of these adult lunches is now 60 cents at the elementary schools and 65 cents at Smith-Cotton and the junior high school.
- Purchase window shades, girls athletic uniforms and basketball equipment.
- Accept the resignation of Mrs. Kathryn Spillers, a cook at Washington School.
- Appoint two special education aides, Julienne Thomason and Mrs. Jewell Schilb.
- Make Ron Sorensen sponsor of the National Honor Society and William Impey sponsor of the chess club at the junior high.

More criticism for Ford

WASHINGTON (AP) — For the second time this week, the issue of presidential pardon for Watergate has sent waves of criticism crashing over Gerald R. Ford's White House.

Ford on Tuesday authorized a spokesman to announce that the President was considering pardons for everyone connected with the Watergate scandal.

The resulting adverse reaction from Congress exceeded in intensity the largely negative response that greeted Ford's pardon on Sunday of former President Richard M. Nixon. Some public figures who had supported the Nixon pardon declined to comment on the news that Ford now was pondering blanket pardons.

"I hope this will get no further than a study," said Senate Democratic Whip Robert C. Byrd of West Virginia. "Making a second mistake won't help matters. Pardoning all those connected with Watergate would complete the cover-up of the cover-up."

Senate Republican Whip Robert P. Griffin of Michigan begged off comment, saying: "Let me think for a while...." Sen. Hugh Scott of Pennsylvania, the Senate Republican leader, declined comment, as did California Gov. Ronald Reagan. All three had previously voiced their support for the Nixon pardon.

Former Atty. Gen. Elliot L. Richardson, however, saw a logical connection between the Nixon pardon and Ford's announcement that he was studying pardons for others.

The pardon study "is of course made necessary by the other pardon," Richardson said.

But any such connection was denied by House Republican Leader John J. Rhodes of Arizona, who said he supports the Nixon pardon but "it does not necessarily follow that a similar pardon should be issued to those individuals under the former president who participated in criminal activity."

Two Watergate principals had differing reactions.

Convicted Watergate burglar Frank Stugis said, "I think it would be a wonderful thing. I don't feel like being a criminal all my life." Sturgis has served time for the burglary and now is free on appeal.

A more subdued response came from John D. Ehrlichman, Nixon's former domestic affairs aide and one of the cover-up defendants.

He said that the problem with a pardon "is that when you know you're innocent, it precludes the possibility that your innocence will be established finally." He would not say fiatly whether he would not nonetheless welcome a pardon.

Sen. Sam J. Ervin, D-N.C., chairman of the Senate Watergate committee, declared: "I can't imagine that he (Ford) could possibly make such a mockery of the principle of equal justice under law by pardoning these men who undertook to steal from the American people their right to a free election and to undermine the process by which presidents are chosen."

Sen. Walter F. Mondale, D-Minn., said he will introduce a constitutional amendment allowing Congress to overturn future presidential pardons by a two-thirds vote of both houses. He also called for serious consideration in Congress of reopening the impeachment proceedings against Nixon.

High speed rail systems are tested in the desert

PUEBLO, Colo. (AP) — Thirty miles east of Pueblo, amidst a semi-arid desert is a Buck Rogers world of modern buildings and sleek, powerful machines that look like spaceships.

They're possible forerunners of future mass transit systems to move people around at 300 miles or more an hour. They travel on rails, on cushions of air, on magnetic fields.

The Department of Transportation's High Speed Ground Test Center, which sprouted in the desert four years ago, is there to harness the latest technology to improve ground transportation, including present rail, future high speed rail and advanced systems.

The $55 million complex has more than 30 miles of tracks and guideways and a Rail Dynamics Laboratory with the world's most advanced computer-controlled simulator, which permits simulation of speeds up to 288 miles per hour under varying track conditions.

A bridge crosses a pair of tracks with a high rail in the center. Three miles up the track is a burst of smoke or dust — hurtling at incredible speed is a red and white bullet-shaped projectile. It zips under the ridge and out of sight.

The speeding object was a linear induction motor research vehicle, or LIMRV. Glenn A. Reiff, the center's senior project engineer, says it travels at 150 miles an hour and has a two-man crew. Earlier this year it set a world speed record for rail vehicles of 234 miles an hour.

Such motors are essentially rotary motors unrolled and laid out flat. They are propelled by electromagnetic forces and because they have no moving parts, they are noiseless, vibrationless and practically pollution-free.

Linear motors power two unconventional guided vehicles at the center: a tracked air cushion vehicle (TACV) and a tracked levitated vehicle. (TLV).

The TACV, designed to carry 60 passengers at speeds up to 150 miles per hour, uses the air exhaust from three jet engines for lifting itself a few inches above its five-mile long u-shaped cement guideway.

The TLV, built for speeds up to 300 m.p.h., may be levitated magnetically as well as by air on its 21.8-mile guideway.

The department recently awarded Ford Motor Co. a $2.1 million contract for development and testing of a a vehicle that could ride on a magnetic field above a single aluminum rail. It could lead to streamlined vehicles that would move along one-foot above a guide rail at 300 m.p.h. or more in the mid or late 1980s.

The vehicle would be pollution-free and quiet. Rail maintenance costs would be reduced substantially because of lack of friction between the craft and the rail.

The Ford vehicle will use electromagnets to keep floating above the rail, but its propulsion will come from rockets. It will use rubber wheels to support itself at speeds under 50 m.p.h.

Department officials feel such a transportation system would be ideal for transit between cities. Representatives of several communities in the United States and abroad are watching testing developments at the center.

Department officials feel such a transportation system would be ideal for transit between cities. Representatives of several communities in the United States and abroad are watching testing developments at the center.

About two-thirds of the tracks completed here are for testing conventional railway and transit equipment. Included are different types and length of rail. With old-fashioned wood ties costing $20 each these days, the durability of concrete ties is being examined.

A nine-mile transit loop, with an electrified third rail, is used by the Federal Railroad Administration to develop portable instrumentation for on-the-spot diagnosing of track condition, to evaluate improved subway cars, to perfect hybrid electrical-gas turbine propulsion for rapid transit cars and to study energy storage propulsion for subway systems, using a flywheel concept.

Branching off one of the main tracks is a nearly mile-long spur where the impact of collisions and derailments is studied.

"These tests are aimed at improving ride comfort, safety, reliability and speed," Reiff said. "Through these activities we are developing the technology of systems which can provide the basis for transportation system decisions for the next two decades."

Ford not the only one to lose his swimming pool

By STEVE WILSON
Associated Press Writer

TOKYO (AP) — The new U.S. ambassador to Japan, James D. Hodgson, and President Ford have at least one complaint in common. Both lost their personal swimming pools recently when they took new jobs.

Hodgson used to enjoy a dip in the pool at his Beverly Hills, Calif., home. But the ambassador's pool in Tokyo was torn out when work began this summer on a new embassy building. Ford lost his pool when he moved into the White House.

"They took away my swimming pool, so I'm among the disadvantaged," the 57-year-old ambassador joked during an interview. "For a Californian not to have a swimming pool, he feels disadvantaged."

The former Lockheed Aircraft Corp. vice president and former secretary of labor in 1970-72 arrived in Japan in July with his wife, Maria, for his first diplomatic assignment.

Hodgson was nominated in March for the post, but his confirmation was held up by Sen. Stuart Symington, D-Mo. Symington reportedly feared Hodgson's appointment might give Lockheed an edge in international sales over the McDonnell Douglas Corp., the giant aircraft maker in Symington's hometown of St. Louis.

Hodgson said he used the time during the delay to do extensive research on Japan and now he is immersed in meeting as many people as possible and learning first-hand about Japan.

"One of the delights of diplomatic life, compared to business life, is that there are many things in which the wife can be included," he said.

"It is not only good for domestic felicity, but in this case it also is good for Japanese-American relations," the ambassador added.

He said the Japanese seem delighted with President Ford and his obvious demonstration of interest in the Japanese.

The ambassador pointed out that the first individual representative of a foreign nation Ford met as President was the Japanese ambassador in Washington. The new President declared that he plans to visit Japan this year, and he was invited Prime Minister Kakuei Tanaka to stop in Washington during his trip to Canada and Latin America this month.

"This is the kind of thing that Japanese-American relations need," Hodgson said.

"It shows a sensitivity to the fact that the Japanese feel they have a special relationship with the United States and they rely on the United States and they need assurance from the United States.

"No more conspicuous assurance could be given than this kind of attention."

The ambassador starts his day at 6:30 a.m. with exercises, followed by an hour's Japanese language lesson with his wife and an instructor. Most of his days and, frequently the evenings, are occupied with get-acquainted meetings with Japanese government and business leaders and members of the U.S. community in Japan.

Hodgson was raised in Minnesota and went to the University of California at Los Angeles for graduate work.

He joined Lockheed as a personnel assistant in 1941, spent three years in the Pacific as a naval air combat intelligence officer during World War II and then returned to Lockheed.

Eliminate fire hazards

CHARLOTTESVILLE, Va. (AP) — Within one hour, some 300 fires are likely to rage somewhere in the United States killing one person, injuring 34 and destroying more than $300,000-worth of property.

To underscore the tragic toll claimed by fire each year and to promote fire safety education, October 6-12 has been designated National Fire Prevention Week.

According to a report issued last year by The National Commission on Fire Prevention and Control, it is the indifference and ignorance of the public that keeps some fires burning at an alarming rate.

Yet there are "many measures, often simple procedures, that can be taken," notes the report, "to greatly reduce these losses."

The commission suggests that families make a checklist of ways to eliminate fire hazards from the home, conduct a "rehearsal" of steps to be taken in the event of fire and install fire extinguishers, escape ladders and early-warning fire detectors that sound an alarm when activated by excessive heat or smoke.

"Statistics show that 80 per cent of home fires that injure or kill occur between 11 p.m. and 6 a.m. when people are asleep," notes Rick Goings, of the Fire Equipment Manufacturers Assn. and president of Dynamics, headquartered here, distributor of home fire detectors. "The majority of victims die from inhaling poisonous fumes before the flames ever reach them."

There are many cases on record, notes the National Commission on Fire Prevent and Control, where lives would have been saved if the victims were awakened to the presence of fire in its early stages.

To keep your home safe from fire, Goings suggests these guidelines:

. . .Never leave small children unattended at home. Make sure matches, lighters, flames and spark sources are out of their reach.

. . .Never smoke in bed. Thoroughly extinguish all cigarette butts, cigar and pipe ashes before disposing of them in a garbage container.

. . .Have all furnaces, water heaters, stoves, ovens and smokepipes inspected annually. Learn how to take proper care of these systems throughout the year.

. . .Never leave combustible materials near a flame source. For example, paint cans should never be stored near a basement furnace.

. . .Keep all flammable materials in tightly closed safety cans, out of reach of children and pets.

. . .Inspect all exposed wiring, extension cords and appliances often. Never run wires under a rug or around a hook. Replace frayed or damaged wiring immediately.

. . .Install early-warning fire detectors and fire escapes or escape ladders as needed.

. . .Never open a door if it feels hot or if smoke is seeping in around the edges. A closed door will help keep the fire and poisonous smoke contained.

. . .Never run through a smoke-filled area to escape. Crawl low on the floor, and if possible, hold a damp cloth over your mouth and nose.

. . .If trapped in a room, open slightly a window furthest from the door and put your face to the opening to breathe.

. . .Draw a fire escape floor plan for the entire house and locate the best window in each room to serve as an emergency exit.

Toys designed for retarded children

By KILEY ARMSTRONG

MANSFIELD, Conn. (AP) — A "flying saucer" that rocks and turns and a plastic box with beads that bounce have been selected winners in a toy contest judged by retarded children.

Louis Boly, training director of the state's Mansfield Training School for the mentally retarded, said the toys will be used to reinforce learning in profoundly and severely retarded children. Playing with a toy is sometimes a more appealing reward than food, he said.

Toys designed for profoundly and severely retarded children must be safer and more durable than those on the general toy market.

"It has to be free from hazards such as something you can swallow or take apart. A lot of commercial toys are excellent, but they're not durable," Boly said in a telephone interview.

Boly said some educational toys "move too quickly. For the retarded child, it must be broken down into steps." Good toys must have color, form, movement and sounds that hold children's interest.

The rocking flying saucer, designed by James Catalano of Berlin, was declared an instant winner when the children "wouldn't get off it." The jumping beads toy was designed after a physical therapist requested equipment to help a child with balance problems learn to counteract slight movements.

The jumping beads toy, activated by static electricity when the box is rubbed, held the youngsters' attention and was easy to manipulate, the school judged. It was designed by Pamela Benjamin of Middletown.

The school will offer the toy designs to parents and schools across the nation, with the suggestion that mildly retarded or handicapped children in other schools produce the toys for the more severely retarded children. In this way the toys would benefit both those who play with them and those who make them.

Boly said that good toys for the retarded are not commercially available because it is unprofitable to produce them. However, the winning toys in the Mansfield contest could be manufactured for any child because of their durability and appeal, he said.

Boly termed the contest, sponsored by the school and the University of Connecticut School of Engineering, successful, and said another will be held next year.

"The toy contest was one to get people turned on to mental retardation and handicapped people," he said.

Equipped for carpentry

Jane Thomas is a member of the Carpenters and Joiners of America Local Union 1098 in Baton Rouge, La. From apprentice to journeyman will require two more years of weekly classes and on-the-job training. She says she has enjoyed every day of it.

Union carpenter nails down apprenticeship

BATON ROUGE, La. (AP) — When a new idea hammers away at a woman, she will find a way to nail it down. This is the nuts-and-bolts story of how Jane Thomas happened to become one of the first women union carpenters in America.

Jane's dimpled face, slim figure and manicured hands are familiar sights to members of the Carpenters and Joiners of America Local Union 1098 here.

When her four-year apprenticeship of weekly classes and on-the-job training has been completed, Jane will be a full-fledged union carpenter — and a good one, her co-workers agree.

Her interest in the trade zoomed when she learned that the pay of an apprentice doubled that of any job she had ever held — securities cashier, beautician, chef and over-the-counter stock trader.

Why not become a carpenter? She felt certain she'd like the work.

She applied to the union, satisfied examiners and interviewers, and won acceptance.

Once these hurdles were history, a larger obstacle faced her. It took salesmanship of the highest order to convince her husband, a student at Louisiana State University, that carpentry was a good field for her.

"My husband really didn't like the idea of my being around so many men all the time," she said. "I pointed out that it was the same situation a girl often gets into in office work as far as the ratio of women to men is concerned.

"And girls in an office have to fend off unwanted attention from men simply because they do dress attractively as part of their total role in meeting the public.

"My personal experience is that I have been treated with more respect by fellow construction workers than I have in some office situations."

Thomas finally saw his wife's point of view.

Jane was employed as an apprentice carpenter in November 1972 by a construction company in Baton Rouge. She was one of the crew to build a $3½-million high school in Central, La., a suburb of the state capital.

Her working day begins at 7 a.m. When it's over at 3:30 p.m., she has long evenings — and weekends, too — to spend with her husband, her son and the family pets, and to pursue her avocations.

The Thomas household includes a German shepherd and a parakeet, who get their fair share of love from their mistress.

During off hours, Jane refinishes furniture. Interior carpentry, such as cabinetry, is her favorite in the new field she has entered. She also occasionally appears at trade shows and on radio on behalf of Diston, a tool company.

She has a green thumb as well as a good sawing arm — and Louisiana's climate gives her the chance to garden all year long.

Once Jane has become a master craftsman, the homemaker-turned-home-builder will be able to choose her work.

Skill is only part of being a good carpenter. Self-motivation is just as important, she points out.

"But I think," she contends, "there's a big place for women in construction. It happens to suit my abilities and interests very well."

Polly's pointers

Wood chair arms need sprucing up

By POLLY CRAMER

DEAR POLLY — My Pet Peeve is with the designers of many items we use daily. No matter what they produce from a kitchen range to lunch buckets they persist in putting in as many grooves and crevices as possible. These collect grease and dirt and don't offer smooth, cleanable surfaces. — MRS. W.J.K.

DEAR POLLY — Like Elaine I. too, had a problem with my carpet pile being flat. My children are both under three years and we have mini-shag. I do not have time to keep picking up toys, clothes or just junk. I use the rug rake our rug man gave us to rake up everything left on the rug out into the hall where the articles are separated into different piles. This makes only one trip to each room necessary to put them away. I also use a rug spot cleaner with a bursh on the can and all the spots and spills come off easily. I do enjoy your column the most. — YVONNE.

DEAR POLLY — Being a do-it-yourselfer I always wash my own car and finish the job by washing the windows with vinegar and water. Recently I tried this on the chrome trim. After rubbing them dry with a soft cloth the bumpers and trim sparkled like mirrors. — REV. E.P.R.

DEAR POLLY — My husband was watching my friend make broom-stick lace. I am learning to do this and asked him to make me a dowel to do the work on. He suggested that I get a new toilet plunger (large or small) and use that instead of the broomstick because it would hold on to the table or wall and I would have an easier time making this lace. If I get a Polly Dollar it goes to my clever husband. — MRS. R.B.

DEAR POLLY — When a garment, especially polyester ones, gets a snag use a needle threader pushed up from the underneath side right where the snag is. Thread the needle threader with the snag thread and pull through to the back. — JANET.

DEAR POLLY — When you have to put 25 candles on a cake even little birthday candles can be expensive. I clip the burned part of a used candle wick off with the scissors and if not enough wick is left to light again I gently cut the wax away enough so the candle can be lighted. This way I use birthday candles twice instead of just once. — WILMA.

Polly's problem

DEAR POLLY — How do you clean the wooden arms on a vinyl arm chair? I tried washing these with a cold water soap and also a furniture cleaner but the marks did not come off. I hope someone can tell me a better way. — ANN.

Scientific forestry methods help meet demand

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — To meet the anticipated rise in demand for building materials and paper, U.S. forest products companies are currently conducting a massive program to sharply boost the timber grown on their 67.5 million acres of forestland.

The program is also designed to help preserve the nation's forest for recreation and to maintain the ecological system, which depends on forests to supply a part of our oxygen and habitat for wildlife.

Without intensive forest management, the country would be unable to meet its lumber and paper needs, industry experts agree. One reason is the country's continual demand for housing. Although there has been a recent drop in housing starts due to "tight" money and the high cost of materials and labor, Congress has called for 26 million new and rehabilitated housing starts in the decade ending in 1978.

Meeting this goal will require about twice the amount of wood construction materials currently produced in the United States. Paper demand is also expected to rise as new uses for paper products are developed. At present, the average American consumes about 640 pounds of paper annually. By the year 2000, this figure is expected to climb to about 1,000 pounds.

Although the United States is currently growing more wood than it cuts, the need for wood timber is expected to double by the end of the century, according to C.R. Dahl, president of Crown Zellerbach, paper and forest products producer headquartered here.

"Since the amount of forestland in the United States cannot be expanded, our only alternative is to make the land more productive," said Dahl.

To boost the productivity of forestlands, paper companies use a wide variety of techniques. Tree grafting and cross pollination are employed to improve "tree quality." Before they are transplanted in the forest, millions of young seedlings annually receive "intensive care" in specially built and equipped tree "nurseries."

One such nursery in Aurora, Ore., is a dramatic example of how science and technology can be combined to assist nature. About 12 million "minitrees" are annually grown in this nursery, which is about one square city block in size.

Seeds produced by superior trees are placed in plastic "incubators" about the size of a large test tube. Electronically controlled moisture, temperature and fertilization enable the seedlings to develop an unusually healthy root structure and grow about twice as fast as bare root seedlings.

After a year in the nursery, the "minitrees" are transplanted in the Pacific Northwest, where they have an 85 to 90 per cent survival rate, significantly higher than seedlings dropped by trees in the forest itself.

When the "minitrees" are removed from their containers to be planted, each has a complete, undisturbed and healthy root structure snugly contained in its own soil. The seedlings grow twice as fast as those in a wild state, because the nursery provides them with two growing seasons in one calendar year.

One company is now experimenting with "time release" fertilizer capsules that are placed in the seedling container. The nutrients in the capsule are gradually released over a prescribed period of time and nourish the young trees through their first months or years in the woods.

Forest product companies now make extensive use of "tree breeding" to improve the quality of their trees. Cuttings from superior trees that are outstanding for height, straightness, disease resistance and other characteristics are grafted to established root stock. Seeds from these trees are also planted at the companies' tree improvement centers with the aim of creating orchards of superior trees, which then supply seed for later forest plantings.

Forest experts report that despite the inroads of civilization for the past 400 years, there is still 75 per cent of the forest land today that existed when Christopher Columbus discovered America.

Real gambler finds reel role easy

NEW YORK (AP) — Amarillo Slim, who says he has "acted all my life but not in front of the camera," has finally corrected the oversight and made his film debut.

The well-known professional gambler who has won the World Series of poker twice makes a brief appearance as himself in "California Split," a film about compulsive gamblers starring George Segal and Elliott Gould.

"I was hired as a technical advisor, they told me, but when I got up there (a location site in Reno, Nev.), all of a sudden they wanted me to play cards. That's how it came 'bout," drawled Texan Thomas Austin Preston Jr., who is known as "Amarillo Slim" because of his home town and his 6-foot-4, 171-pound build.

Did his acting experience at the poker table come in handy in film acting?

"Yeah," he nodded in his characteristically hang-loose manner. "I was relaxed. Unconcerned. I didn't give a damn about those cameras. I did what I've been doing all my life."

Slim added, however, he has no desire to go into the movies, and "sure hope to keep playin' poker for the rest of my life."

"California Split" is being promoted as a film that glamorizes gambling. Does he recommend gambling as everyone's pastime?

"No!" The cornflower blue eyes in the long, narrow face opened wide. "I'm not for legalized gambling even. I feel it would cause too much of a hardship on people who cannot afford it. If people can afford it, it suits me. I enjoy scratching them up a bit. But suppose a guy who works all week for a salary stops in for a drink on the way home, and loses two or three hundred dollars on slot machines. Now if it pertains to him and him only, it tickles me to death. But when he gets home, if he's got a wife and some little kids, and the wife's not gonna get a new Easter dress, that doesn't suit me."

Slim believes that poker, a game born in America, is getting popular as a spectator sport.

"Poker as a spectator sport would be very, very dull. And yet, now that poker has advanced to a new game called 'Hold 'em,' all of a sudden it's entertaining. Because of these open cards the game calls for, you can relate to it even though you are not in it. You can guess who's bluffing and who's on to something."

"Hold 'em" is a variation of seven-card stud in which each player is dealt two cards face down. Five cards are then dealt face up in the center of the table as a community pile. The winner must make the best high hand he can out of his two hole cards and three from the community pile.

It is the game the world's top players play at the World Series, an annual tournament that started informally among them and became a public event in 1969. Slim won it in 1968 and 1972.

"It's the most popular high stakes poker game. If any card player ever plays 'Hold 'em' for three days he'll forget all other forms of poker," he said.

Slim, 45, has been a professional gambler all his life. "I like competitiveness," he said. "That's a tonic in my life. Forget the money. That's just the means of keeping score."

His gambling is not limited to poker. In 1972, he successfully bet $30,000 that he could run the rapids of Idaho's treacherous Salmon River. "That was the only time I ever risked my life on a wager," he said.

Slim says he has lost some gambles but the balance sheet is "far, far in excess on my side." Its tangible evidence is his ranch home in Amarillo, Tex., where he keeps more than 2,000 head of cattle, 27 pairs of custom-made boots, 30 custom-tailored Western suits, and a wife and three kids.

The key to his success: "I don't want to sound as if I were braggin,' but I'd say it was the keen mind and sharp wit."

Halt called to town growth

GATLINBURG, Tenn. (AP) — Imagine a town with no poverty, no unemployment, no slums and virtually no crime.

That's Gatlinburg — gateway to the Great Smoky Mountains National Park.

The Smoky is the nation's most popular park, attracting eight million visitors a year. Gatlinburg, on the park's northern border, is overnight host to many of them.

To accommodate this huge influx of visitors, 170 motels and four hotels have been built on either side of the Little Pigeon River which cascades out of the Smokies through the town. They can take care of about 25,000 persons a night.

Some say all this construction has spoiled the beauty of what only 40 years ago was a sleepy little mountain village. Others say the growth was natural as more and more persons flocked to see the Smokies.

As time passed, Gatlinburg outgrew its ability to dispose of the refuse and sewage produced by so many visitors. After some raw sewage seeped into the Little Pigeon, the Tennessee Health Department stepped in last fall and ordered the city to halt all new construction until it builds a new waste water treatment plant.

"This moratorium on building is good for Gatlinburg," says City Manager Joe Ward Booth. "It will give us time to take a good look at ourselves and decide where we want to go."

Before the moratorium was imposed, the city commission waived a long-standing rule that no building higher than 60 feet could be erected. It gave Sheraton Corp. permission to build a high rise hotel.

Sheraton is erecting a 16-story $5-million hotel on a hill six blocks from Parkway, the town's main street. Its 315 rooms are scheduled to be available for the 1975 summer tourist season.

Booth said he doesn't expect the city fathers ever to relax the 60-foot building limit again.

"We want to keep Gatlinburg looking as much as possible like it has for the past 25 years or so," the city manager said.

"We are a family resort and much of the tourism and convention business we attract is repeat business. We want to keep it that way."

In all its history Gatlinburg, a town of 2,300 residents, has recorded only one rape case, two killings and two robberies.

"Traffic and noise are two of our biggest problems," says Police Chief Willie B. Ogle.

Ogle, who has headed the 15-man police force since 1952, said crime as most towns know it is virtually nonexistent in Gatlinburg.

"We have a few cases of unattended car thefts and a minor drug problem in the summer with some of the young people who work in restaurants and motels, but that's about all."

Jack Huff, operator of the town's oldest hotel — the famed Mountain View — remembers when Gatlinburg was a mountain village of one store and about 15 houses and a log cabin.

Huff's father, Andrew Jackson Huff, came here in the late 1890s and went into the sawmill and logging business.

Jack Huff, 71, says at least one-third of the guests in his 117-room hotel are repeaters.

Some guests, such as Dr. and Mrs. R.J. Harvey of Zionsville, Ind., and Mrs. Hope Thompson of Lexington, Ky., have made annual pilgrimages to the Mountain View every year for the past 30 years.

Capital shortage seen

By JOHN CUNNIFF
AP Business Analyst

NEW YORK (AP) — Americans aren't saving enough to finance the nation's future and the consequences could be absolutely appalling, "literally incalculable," according to the findings of a study just released.

It could lead to further urban congestion and decay, say the researchers who put the study together. It could mean failures of small-and medium-size businesses, the encouragement of industrial oligarchy, and more power shortages.

The dismal tale gets grimmer. It could very well mean that ecological and environmental programs will be aborted for lack of funds. It could mean high unemployment. It might mean chronically depressed stock prices.

Millions of Americans dependent upon private pension plans might find their resources drained away. Health and educational services might have to be curtailed. Living standards might fall.

These, says the New York Stock Exchange, are some of the implications of a developing capital shortage, a shortage that already is forcing business to curtail expansion.

In fact, all these consequences are to some extent already with us.

"A capital shortage is no longer merely a threat for the future but a fact of the present," said James J. Needham, chairman of the Big Board, where prices of stocks are at their lowest in four years.

This is how the situation stacks up between now and 1985, say the economists and researchers at the exchange:

Sources of funds: business savings, $2.923 trillion, personal savings, $1.109 trillion, for a total capital resource of $4.032 trillion.

Uses of funds: gross private domestic investment, consisting mainly of spending for industrial plant and equipment, and residential construction, $4.503 trillion; federal deficit financing, $42 billion; state and local government financing, $30 billion; federal credit agency borrowing, $103 billion.

A quick calculation shows a need for $4.678 trillion of capital and a likely availability, under present attitudes and laws, of only $4.032 trillion, or a shortage of $646 billion. And that's conservative, the exchange maintains.

The detailed report, which was the basis of a speech Needham prepared Monday for the Economic Club of Detroit, is the big gun in an exchange offensive to defeat the capital shortage problem.

As Needham said in his prepared remarks, "We have become literally obsessed by the need for identifying the scope and implications of this problem before it becomes too late to do anything about it."

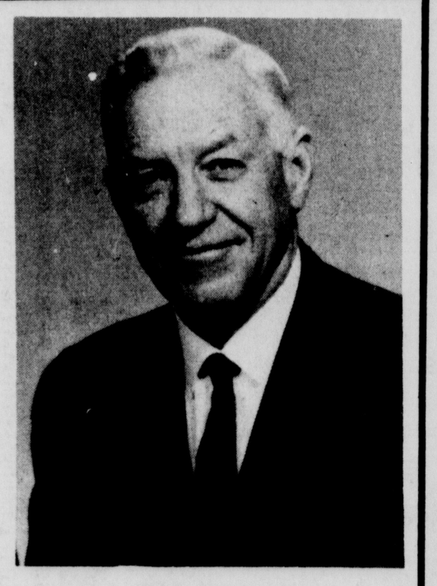

Greeting cards are mail bonanza

NEW YORK (AP) — Americans who exchange greeting cards account for nearly 10 per cent of the 80 billion pieces of mail handled annually by the United States Postal Service, reports the National Association of Greeting Card Publishers.

The mail bonanza also represents more than 20 per cent of the 34 billion pieces of first class mail dropped into mail boxes each year.

Japanese continuing drive to develop foreign sources

By DON KENDALL
AP Farm Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Despite inflation problems and setbacks in domestic livestock production, Japan appears to be continuing a policy of agricultural development overseas to help assure long range supplies of raw food materials, a report by the Agriculture Department indicated today.

The drive by Japan to develop diversified foreign sources of such commodities as feed grain and soybeans eventually could have an impact on world supplies and prices that U.S. farmers get for what they produce.

But in its report today, the department's Foreign Agricultural Service said Japan's declining foreign exchange reserves have caused a tightening up of overseas development for some sectors such as real estate, recreation and stocks.

The top priority, according to the report, will be given to energy and food. Thus, it appears Japan will not let up in its move toward encouraging larger production of soybeans in Brazil, more corn in Thailand, beef cattle in Australia and other commodities in areas where Japanese investment can pay off.

The report was written by Harlan J. Dirks, recently named U.S. agricultural attache to Australia.

Dirks said Japan has shifted more attention recenty to Latin America as a potential provider of more of its agricultural raw product needs. In 1970, for example, 60 per cent of Japan's direct investment in developing countries was in Asia and 20 per cent in Latin America.

By 1972, he said, direct investments increased to 46 per cent in Latin America while the Asian share dropped to 37 per cent.

"There are now about 50 funded Japanese agricultural projects in Latin America, with most of the commercial interest centered in Brazil," Dirks said.

Commodities of greatest interest to Japan in Brazil are soybeans, corn and beef, Dirks said. Those are prime items now being exported to Japan by the United States.

Dirks said, there has been what he called "noticeable backlash" in some partner nations where opposition to Japanese investments has developed.

"The one exception appears to be Latin America, where there appears to be little, if any, anti-Japanese sentiment," he said.

WASHINGTON (AP) — A bovine sexist note by the Agriculture Department: What the Japanese call the King of Beef actually comes from pristine females.

"Americans who've been lucky enough to taste it call it a superb culinary experience," USDA says in a recent publication. "With a grocery tab ranging from $12 to $17 Yankee dollars a pound, Japan's Ise Matsuzaka beef is the most expensive prime beef in the world."

What makes it so outstanding?

"For one thing, Japanese cattlemen are careful to select only virgin females from the breeding districts," the report said. "They believe a drop in beef tenderness is definitely discernible when bulls are allowed in the pen."

Economists given new role

NEW YORK (AP) — By inviting 21 of their brethren to a White House conference last week, the Ford administration has helped greatly to thrust economists into the role of high priests.

That ascension has been going on for two decades, and probably more, but it is still recent enough for many people to remember when economists were neither seen nor heard, buried as they were in books and statistics.

Their coming out was neither inevitable nor foreseeable. Events, it seems, drew them into the arenas of public controversy, and a gradually acquired taste for politics and government now keeps many of them there.

Prof. Walter Heller did much to publicize the influence of economists. When he joined the John F. Kennedy administration as chairman of the Council of Economic Advisers, he faced an economy marked by poor performance and great potential.

The resulting tax cut proposed by Heller received much credit for the subsequent boom of the 1960s, a boom that was silenced only by an attempt to fight a war without raising taxes. The economists shouted it wouldn't work, and it didn't.

Ever since the late 1960s the nation has been riddled with inflation, and economists have been on almost constant call.

While they acquired a considerable taste for politics during this time they didn't receive the power.

John Kenneth Galbraith, Havard professor and writer, was sent abroad by President Kennedy even though his inclinations were to remain in Washington as an economic adviser.

George P. Shultz and Herbert Stein were the most prominent economic advisers in the latter years of the Nixon administration, but their decisions were often overridden, especially in regard to the Aug. 15, 1971, price freeze.

During this time, business also elevated economists into more promient roles, partly because economists now were making good spokesmen.

Academic economists acquired enormous popular followings too. Paul Samuelson of Massachusetts Institute of Technology, wrote a text that has been used by so many students that his popularity is assured.

Others, while remaining in academia, rode forth from time to time as advisers to political candidates. Prof. Milton Friedman of the University of Chicago has been influential in Republican politics for years.

Friedman, Samuelson and others, while avoiding direct involvement in government positions, have encouraged a popular following by writing columns or articles for magazines and newspapers —as well as scholarly journals.

Occasionally you can now detect a reaction setting in against the prominence of the high priests, epecially since the country and the world is, by common agreement, in an economic mess.

Businessmen, for example, have sometimes lamented that the country was being sent down the road to ruin by the bankers or labor or some other group. Now they include economists.

Gasoline was once considered useless

CHICAGO (AP) — If waiting in line for gasoline makes you lose your sense of humor, try to remember that the precious fuel was once considered useless.

In fact, until the automobile came along kerosene was the major product of oil refineries, according to World Book Encyclopedia. Because it burned slowly, it was used to light lamps, heat homes and cook food. Gasoline, too, was a refinery by-product. Because it exploded when ignited, it was often dumped into rivers and creeks for disposal.

People in the news

NEW YORK (AP) — Charges of robbery, grand larceny and possession of stolen property against a 20-year-old New York man accused of stealing a bike from John F. Kennedy Jr. have been dismissed.

For the fourth time, the son of the late President John F. Kennedy failed to show up in court to testify against Robert Lopez. Lopez was charged with stealing young Kennedy's bicycle in Central Park last May 14.

Judge Robert Haft on Monday dismissed the charges against Lopez over the protests of Manhattan Dist. Atty. Richard H. Kuh. Kuh complained that the "Kennedy-Onassis family has been thousands and thousands of miles away" while authorities tried to bring the case to trial.

LONDON (AP) — Prince Charles, already a qualified aircraft pilot, has begun a 3½-month course to learn to fly a helicopter.

The helicopter course includes 38 hours of dual flying, 15 hours solo and 53 hours of ground training. The ground training includes a dunking in a simulated cockpit during which Prince Charles will have to free himself from a harness and escape through a window.

Cave find may shed new light

MEXICO CITY (AP) — Mexican archeologists have found a cave underneath the Pyramid of the Sun used by the Teotihuacans about 300 A.D. which may soon shed more light about the origin and customs of the mysterious race, officials have reported.

The cave, running east to west and about 328 feet long and about 13 feet high, is 16 feet underground exactly below the center of the 820-square-foot base of the Pyramid of the Sun in the Teotihuacan archeological center 30 miles northeast of Mexico City.

It was found by a team from the Mexican National Institute of Anthropology and History two years ago. But it has not been studied completely and the announcement of the find was not publicly made. Dr. Jorge Acosta, institute pre-Hispanic department chief director, told the Associated Press in an interview.

He said a great quantity of pre-classic period broken pottery and ceramics were found in the cave. No sorting of the pottery has yet been made.

"But the study of the cave and the pottery may help us know more about the mysterious Teotihuacans whom we know very little of indeed," Acosta said.

So little is known of the people who inhabited the region that the original name of the place remains a mystery. Teotihuacan is an Aztec dialect name meaning "place of the gods."

The ancient Aztecs, who arrived in Mexico about the 9th century A.D., already found Teotihuacan deserted but considered the city sacred.

Acosta says that the origin of the Teotihuacan race is totally unknown. The enigma of the lost people may never be solved because of the lack of documents or codices about them, he said.

"They came and disappeared without leaving much trace," he said. But the discovery of the cave, he added, may help shed new light on the mysterious culture which built the massive soil and clay pyramids of the central plateau.

Besides the 170-feet-high Pyramid of the Sun, the Teotihuacans also erected a smaller Pyramid of the Moon.

However, no cave has been found underneath the other pyramid.

The discovery of the sun cave was accidental after a heavy downpour which uncovered the opening of the tunnel-like cave, Acosta said.

Almost at the end of the cave, Acosta said, the archeologists found three pathways opening up like a three-leaf clover structure. "We believe the cave may have been a ritual chamber," Acosta said.

The institute plans to issue a complete report on the find in a few months, he added.

Free ballooning popularity rising

By STEVE GRAHAM
Associated Press Writer

HELENA, Mont. (AP) — Free ballooning, the oldest form of man-made aerial transportation, is rapidly becoming the latest fad in aviation recreation.

In recent years, the recreational revolution has sent increasing numbers of people into the skies for personal enjoyment.

Some fly ordinary aircraft. The sky diver is a special sort of individualist, who arrives at the local airport before the wind comes up, buckles on heavy boots, a helmet and two parachutes, and crams himself into a waiting airplane that will take him several thousand feet into the air. After the aircraft climbs to the proper altitude the sky diver is out the door and falling gently under a canopy of silk.

Sailplane enthusiasts disdain the thought of a roaring, smelly engine dragging them through the sky. The sailplane pilot endures the ignominy of being dragged aloft by a powered craft just long enough to get sufficient altitude to catch rising currents of air that can take a powerless craft thousands of feet into the air for hours at a time.

Then there are the balloonists.

Balloons have been around ever since the brothers Montgolfier first defied the law of gravity in 1783. The two Frenchmen simply saw smoke rising from a chimney and decided if they put a bag around the smoke, the bag would rise too.

They did and it did. The hot air balloon was born.

The hot-air balloon flies simply because hot air rises. The hot air inside the bag is lighter than the surrounding air so up it goes.

Early balloonists were a hardy lot. The balloons themselves were made of paper. The passengers were carried in a wicker basket suspended below the bag.

Often one passenger was kept busy stoking the wood fire that provided the hot air for lift while the other passenger tried to keep the paper balloon from catching fire itself.

The gas-filled balloon was developed shortly after the hot-air variety. Another Frenchman, Jacques Charles, produced a 12-foot-diameter, hydrogen-filled balloon by inflating the bag with the "flammable air" produced by heating iron filings and acid.

As years went by helium replaced hydrogen as the "lifting gas." Hydrogen is more efficient than helium but helium doesn't burn.

Modern balloons are of the hot-air variety. Propane burners have replaced a bonfire in the basket and tough rip-stop nylon has replaced paper as the bag material.

Other than that, not much has changed. You heat the air in the bag to go up and let it cool to come down.

The key to successful ballooning is a good ground crew. It takes help to fill the 85-foot bag with hot air — without having the whole thing take off like a child's balloon at the county fair. But the biggest job of the ground crew is to get you, the pilot, back.

In ballooning, you never really know where you're going. The airplane pilot chooses his destination. The sky diver pretty much hits what is under him. The glider pilot can do amazing things to get back to the airport.

But the balloonist follows the wind.

As a matter of fact, you usually plan on winding up in somebody's back yard or cornpatch. Your ground crew, which has been in hot pursuit, comes charging up to meet you.

A modern, nylon, hot-air balloon costs about $7,000. For that you get the balloon, an aluminum gondola (wicker baskets are out of style) and the propane burners.

Like everything else that carries passengers off the ground, free balloons are regulated by the Federal Aviation Administration. Before you load up and lift off, you must pass a written test, gather a few hours of instruction from a qualified teacher and demonstrate to a friendly FAA inspector that you can handle the 85-foot-tall device without being a menace to earth-bound people or property — or yourself.

Once you receive your pilot certificate you're off as part of a very select — but growing — fraternity. There are about 125 registered balloons and 375 licensed balloonists in the U.S.

You can fly higher than most light airplanes — and cheaper too. And, for a little snob appeal, federal regulations say you have the right of way over all other types of aircraft.

Okay, up, up and away.

Sound like a song? You're right — written in a hot air balloon by songwriter Jimmy Webb.

Fewer birth defects

WASHINGTON (AP) — In the first year of life, birth defects cause the highest number of deaths. But, in recent years, medical scientists have made considerable progress improving the situation.

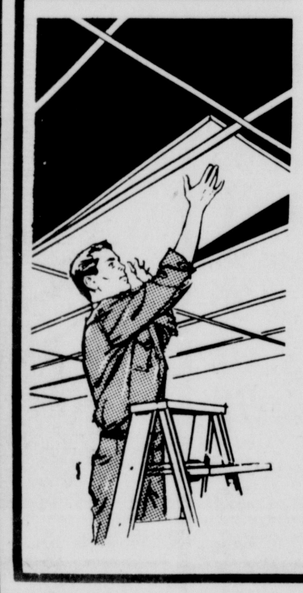

"Many children are now leading meaningful lives, thanks to the fact that their problems were identified and treated in time," says Dr. Nina Scribanu, a pediatrician in charge of Georgetown University's Division of Clinical Genetics and Birth Defects.

Dr. Scribanu has started a "crisis intervention" program, aimed primarily at the diagnosis, prevention and treatment of birth defects. During the past decade, she notes, medical scientists have made several breakthroughs in their efforts to conquer or control birth defects, permitting scientists, in some cases, to replace missing enzymes and detect chromosomal abnormalities.

His dough draws interest

NEW YORK (AP) — It looks more like a city street scene than a bakery display window: busty, smiling women, kewpie-doll girls, moms with kids, ball-players, loving couples — and even a horse — parade behind the glass.

Realistic though they look, the figures are not of flesh, but of dough.

Bakery owners Sal Purpura and his son, Tony, specialize in the creation of elaborate bread sculptures and claim they can fashion any design up to six feet tall in bread dough.

They have often had to support their claim by making to order such wheaten wonders as trains and trolley cars, Adam and Eve in the Garden of Eden, sesame seed lions and tigers, horse-drawn carriages, turtles, and clowns with circus dogs. Customers often bring in photographs from which replicas are fashioned.

For 20 years the elder Purpura's customers have happily carried away turkeys, Santas, Yule trees, Easter bunnies, shamrocks and ballet dancers, all made of bread.

Sal wandered into the world of commercial bread art by chance. When he immigrated here from his native Sicily in 1953 he went to work for a Queens baker. He had never baked before. To commemorate his first Thanksgiving in the United States, he designed bread turkeys for his boss as a gift. Customers saw the unusual birds, wanted their own, and the orders flooded in.

Sal's fortunes rose with his dough. After two years he and a couple of partners opened a bakery in midtown Manhattan, where he developed his craft. Then in 1966, he moved back to Queens to open the store he presently owns.

Tony, now 27, was 21 when he came to work with his father, beginning what they hope will become a family tradition.

"Our busiest time for bread figures is the holidays," Tony said, interpreting for his 62-year-old father who speaks little English. "That's when people have the most parties, and bread figures are a decorating novelty. The rest of the year we usually make three or four figures a week."

Dressed in baker's white and with his father's dark good looks and congenial manner, Tony explained that the figures are fashioned by hand. "No molds are used.

"The standard items like dolls, which are our most popular request, and baseball players take four hours from scratch to finish. It takes only about 10 minutes to shape a figure, an hour to bake it and a couple of hours to cool it to get the moisture out.

"If we've made the figure before, we know just about how much dough to use in different places to get the right proportion. But when we're asked to do something new it may take us two or three tries to get it right."

A standard-size chef d'oeuvre, measuring from one to four feet, costs $4 to $6. Life-size sculptures can be had for $12.

The bread figures come alive in a huge rotating oven. Thirty can be baked at once on the oven's six shelves, but no more than 10 are made at a time. "If you try to make 30, by the time all of them are baked, the first few will be way out of proportion because of overheating," Tony said. "With only 10 figures, each one will bake evenly."

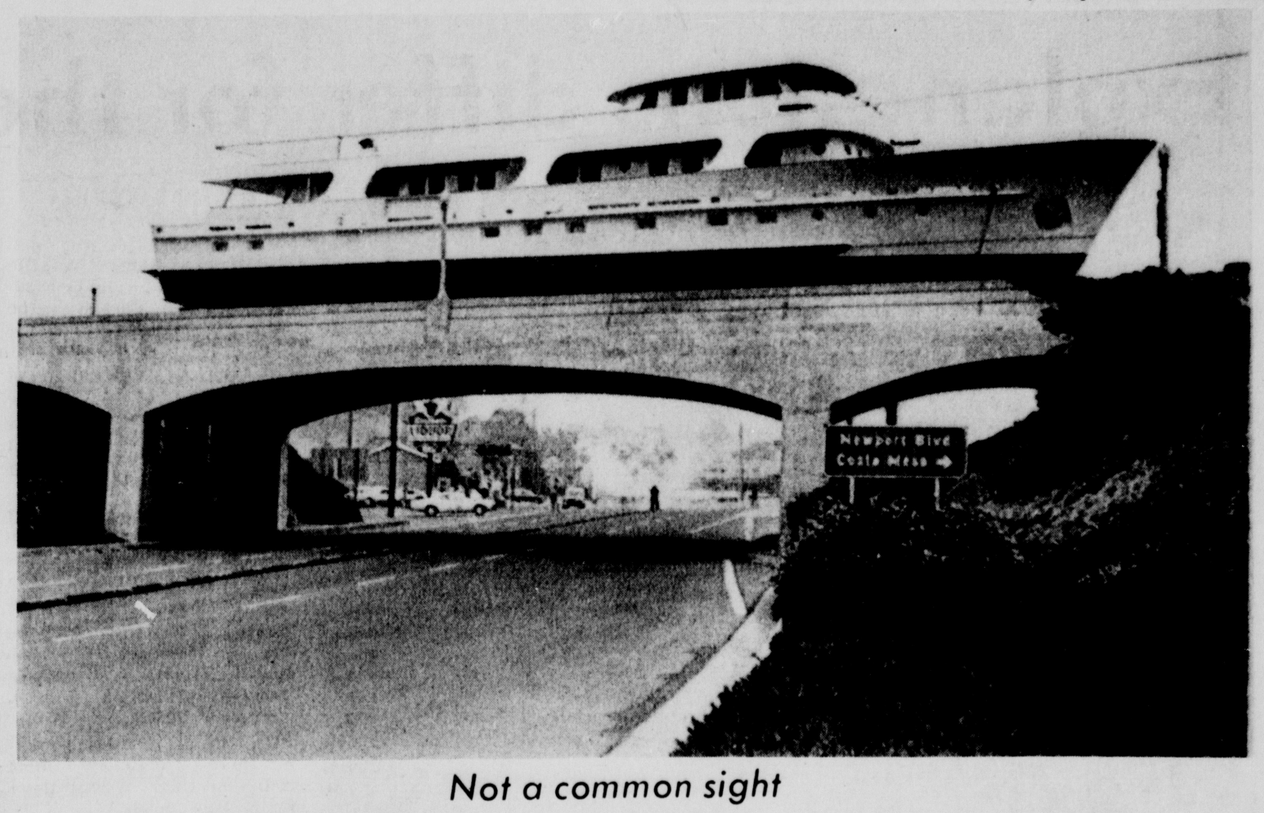

Baking bread designs is not as easy as pie; Tony admits that many monstrosities have sprung from the Purpuras' hands.

"The toughest thing about baking bread figures is hot weather," he said. "The dough loses its strength and firmness. A lot of bakeries use ice in hot weather to preserve the dough, but we don't because ice makes the dough too firm. So when it's hot we have to work twice as fast to compete with the heat."

The business does have its leisurely moments, however. "The easiest part of baking is waiting for the bread to cook, and then eating it," added Tony with the sly look of a kid who'd just snatched forbidden cookies.

Sal and Tony continue to find novelty in their novel trade after many years. "Although we prefer the challenge of a new figure," Tony said, "we don't get tired of making the standard favorites. It's all work."

Do father and son bake at home in their free time for fun? Tony's look was incredulous. "You gotta be kidding!"

Not a common sight

Startled motorists on a Newport Beach, Calif., street witnessed this sight over the weekend. The 126-foot, 220-ton yacht was being hauled five miles from a boatyard to a lunching site. Dollies and the towing tractor ar hidden by the bridge railing. (AP Wirephoto)

Bicycle-taxi offers a way

COPENHAGEN (AP) — For the first time since World War II, Copenhagen has a licensed bicycle-taxi offering "sight-seeing in slow-motion" and plastic raincoats in case of rain.

Jens Nielsen, a 22-year-old bearded student of medicine, and Freben Palsgaard Jensen, a 21-year-old mailman, window decorator and semiprofessional ventriloquist, are partners in the 800-kroner ($135) venture that is part fun, part business and part provocation.

"Frankly, we expect to get more fun than money out of this," Nielsen said while soliciting fares for the two-passenger "taxi-bike" among reluctant tourists in Copenhagen's Town Hall Square.

The first weekend in business brought just two paying passengers — an elderly, but sporting, American couple who paid $3 to ride through the city to their plush hotel in relative splendor on the cushioned plywood seat mounted on the old, red-painted, three-wheel carrier-cycle-turned-taxi-bike.

Nielsen and Jensen, who will go from weekend to regular daily service if the business picks up, see the taxi-bike as the answer to many current problems.

"It consumes no fuel, it's noiseless, it doesn't pollute and the pace is less than nerve-wracking," Nielsen said.

The two taxi-bike owners, who take turns at the pedals, admitted police are still frowning at their vehicle. But after several initial brushes with unsympathetic patrolmen they now have the Ministry of Justice's written word that "nothing in the traffic laws forbids the use of this vehicle for passenger transport."

The basic fare is 80 kroner ($14) per hour, somewhat less for "pretty females," more for "overweight males."

There is a fixed price of 30 kroner ($5) for the standard trip from Town Hall Square to the Little Mermaid statue on the Langelinje pier. This is more than the fare by ordinary taxi.

"It's permitted to talk to the driver," Nielsen said. "Theoretically, we will go wherever a passenger wants to go, but we reserve our rights to refuse to go uphill."

So far, however, business has been slack.

"People are enormously shy and self-conscious about it," Jensen said. "And one man declined a ride on the grounds that it would degrade a fellow human being, me, to a kind of slavery."

PRE-SCHOOL
A Special Program for 3, 4 and 5 Year Olds

BALLET Even the very young can begin their study of classical ballet. The basic body, army and feet positions, as well as the correct French terminology for each is incorporated into the beginner dances. The class will include an introduction to the ballet barre exercises.

ACROBAT Of course acrobat, or gymnastics, for young children must be taught with great care. The teacher must know what exercises are best for young children in order to safely develop their strength, agility, coordination and limberness. Since each child develops differently, the children are helped individually.

TAP Ask a pre-schooler who is taking tap, why they like it and they will tell you that it's fun. Tap speeds up the development of leg and foot coordination, agility and ankle flexibility. It also creates a great awareness of rhythm.

BATON Every child likes to imagine themselves leading a parade, twirling a flashing baton. Twirling improves finger dexterity, hand-eye coordination and wrist and finger flexibility.

Explanations differ for the rising rural crime rate

Lonely beat

Raising dust down a lonely road through an empty stretch of Arapahoe County, Colo., Deputy Sheriff Marvin Tucker is covering the kind of territory where increased accessibility is helping crime spread. Transients can drop off highways, hold up a merchant or burglarize a house, then drive back to the highways and speed away.

Murder in Kansas. Kidnapping in South Georgia. Drug addiction in Ohio. Burglary in the hills of southern West Virginia.

Big city crime has moved to the country. Federal Bureau of Investigation statistics for the first six months of 1974 show urban crime down slightly. But rural crime is up by 18 per cent.

Weldon Kennedy, a member of the FBI's uniform crime reporting division, acknowledges that statistics — if not kept in pespective — can be misleading, and that some of the increase is undoubtedly a reflection of steadily improving crime reporting methods in rural areas. But he also says emphatically:

"There's definitely more crime out there. We just don't know how much."

Georgia Bureau of Investigation Inspector Ronnie Angel says rural crimes are certainly increasing, "the most serious crimes as well."

He cites examples of recent crimes in rural Georgia. Four men have been sentenced to life imprisonment on charges including kidnaping that stemmed from a commando-type gang attack on the community of Glenwood last summer. The town's night policeman was handcuffed to a railroad car while bandits broke into several stores.

In another investigation — this one 40 days of work by the FBI — six men were indicted on 18 charges mostly involving auto theft. Last year, rural Georgia was victimized by bank robberies in Molena, Morven, Uvalda, Glenwood and Dexter.

"I think the fact that the law enforcement in rural areas is hampered by a lack of personnel is one of the reasons for the increase," said Inspector Angel.

"They aren't incompetent but they are inadequate. There are just not enough people in the rural areas to attract proper law enforcement.

"I think the days of spawning crime in a geographic location is a thing of the past. I think the mobility of the criminal is such that local criminals are not confined to local areas. They just roam around."

Sheriff Ted Barr of Cabell County, W.Va., attributes rising rural crime rates to "the population shift, the interstate highways and the sorry lack of law enforcement in rural areas."

In effect, Barr says city police departments — where practically all crime control efforts have been aimed in recent years — have literally chased criminals out into the country where they can operate in relative safety.

Bob Huffman is half of the police force in Hamlin, W.Va., a community of fewer than 1,000 in the southern hills.

"There has been a considerable increase of crime during the past year, mostly breakings and enterings. The pharmacy was broken into recently and there has been some stealing at the Ford and Chevrolet garages," Huffman said.

In Kansas, authorities are investigating the slaying of Richard J. Anton, 48, and his wife Clara, 47, who were found dead June 20 in the ruins of a burned-out home they were rebuilding near Ensign, a town of 233 in southwest Kansas.

Both had been shot, and arson was suspected.

Robert Clester, Kansas Bureau of Investigation Supervisor for the western part of the state, and Gray County Attorney Jay Don Reynolds say they have few leads in the case.

The FBI's Kennedy says somebody needs to start making a study of rural areas.

The Ohio Farm Bureau, with 60,000 members from the state's rural hinterland, is looking into the subject.

"About the only thing we know so far is that nobody knows much about it," said G. Howard Phillips, professor of rural sociology at Ohio State University. He's the man the Farm Bureau asked to direct its study.

"The University has access to various sources of information. I contacted the Current Research Information System ... they didn't turn up a single study. Two other educational research services also failed to turn up anything. We really don't know how much of a problem there is out there," Phillips said.

He and the Farm Bureau staff are getting plenty of feedback, however, from farmers and small town residents.

"In many areas, people who just a few years ago wouldn't have dreamed of such things are now locking their doors," Phillips said. "And insurance rates are going up, too.

"And then there's drugs. The parents are alarmed. Right now, we don't know how much of this is fact and how much is alarm."

Surveys among the Ohio Farm Bureau members reveal most of them feel shifting populations and negative changes in society are responsible for the crime increase. Some farmers have formed vigilante groups to combat the problem, others demand more and better law enforcement.

"Most of the responses blamed the crime increase on undisciplined youth, city migrants, people under 30 and drug users," Phillips said. "They generally felt the highway patrol to be effective and sheriffs to be poor law enforcement agencies.

"Police in rural areas, in my opinion, are people oriented, and the better you know people the less likely you are to lock them up or go to the courts."

Howard Docker, assistant director of the Kansas Bureau of Investigation, says the increase in rural crime reflects a general increase in all crime. He says the big reason for it is removal of capital punishment.

"After 30 years in law enforcement, I believe removal of capital punishment enters into it to a greater degree than anything else. I know a lot of homicides are the result of passion, but now there is less fear of killing and of a robbery or some other crime turning into a murder for which you could be hanged.

"As long as we had capital punishment, the robbery and killings were few and far between."

'Dragon People' say their young king must remain independent

By HORST FAAS .

THIMPHU, Bhutan (AP) — The Bhutanese year of the wooden tiger may be a watershed in the history of the Land of Dragons.

For centuries, Bhutan has followed a deliberate, systematic policy of isolation that has earned the country the reputation of the world's last forbidden kingdom.

But this reputation is fading fast as Bhutan's rulers open the gates on the mountain passes to foreigners and to modern civilization both good and bad.

Some Bhutanese see the leap into the 20th century as a necessity to maintain individuality and independence; others think it's unavoidable and have given up fighting the change.

A narrow jungled valley with majestic waterfalls, once dreaded by travelers on foot or mule because of preying tigers and big bears, is being scraped bare. With Indian assistance an $8.4 million hydroelectric project is being built.

★ ★ ★

The majestic fortress and lamaistic monastery of Paro, built on a steep hillside, once overlooked a secluded valley with earth-colored houses and provided spiritual and physical protection for its inhabitants whose world ended at the next mountain pass.

Today the fortress overlooks one of two airfields in Bhutan, recently extended to 1,400 meters to make it possible for tourist groups to land here.

The roofs of almost every house in the Paro Valley, once covered with wooden shingles and weighted down with rocks against the severe winds, are now covered with green or wine-red tin roofing.

Bhutan's oldest Dzong — fortress, seat of government and Buddhist monastery all at once — at the entrance to the Thimphu Valley faces long lines of army barracks — ugly, long, whitewashed huts.

The government has made a major effort to give modern Bhutan a facelift in reverse to restore some of its traditional features.

But the temptations of practicality and lower costs seem too high. Tin roofs, power lines and noisy car horns echoing in the Himalayan valleys apparently are here to stay.

Bhutanese call their country Druk Yul, land of the mystic dragons of their Tantric Buddhist religion. They themselves are the Drukpas, the Dragon People.

A businessman in downtown Thimphu calls his shop the "Druk Store."

Some of the younger Drukpas sit in the Thimpu Swiss Coffee House dressed in jeans higher-priced in Bhutan than in New York City, wearing colored T-shirts imprinted "Love" or with sergeant's stripes.

Only within the massive walls of the Tashichho Dzong, seat of Bhutan's government and the chief lama, is the traditional Kho dress a must. It consists of a minikimono that ends above the knee and is made of hand-woven cloth embroidered with good luck signs. Violation of the dress rule costs a $65 fine.

Bhutan's new king, Jigme Singhi Wangchuck, was formally enthroned June 3. He is 18 years old — one of the world's youngest ruling monarchs. He reflects both the old and the new.

His people bow respectfully when he walks in a robe of royal yellow to a soccer field, where he dresses in shorts and T-shirt to play as his team's goalkeeper. The 5-foot-9 king has the walk and figure of a middleweight boxer and the many scars on his legs betray his hobbies — horseback riding, rough Bhutanese soccer and archery.

Despite his age and only three years of secondary schooling in England, the king shows an astute grasp of the socioeconomic, cultural and political problems of his country.

He believes that contact with his people, whom he describes as "loyal and apolitical," is most important.

Bhutan's current budget totals $20 million — and 75 per cent of this originates from outside sources, mostly India.

"Since India offered her assistance in 1948, she has given generously and liberally, but today the aid is not adequate in all fields," says Foreign Minister Dawa Tsering.

Aid from the United Nations Development Program, Japan, Singapore, Australia, and private Swiss sources supplements India assistance.

Education ranks highest among this year's budget expenditures. There are 92 schools with 12,000 students. Fifty years ago there were only two schools. English is compulsory from the first year on.

On the political scene, Bhutanese diplomats compared the role of their country to a small creature sleeping between two restless elephants.

One is India, the big brother. In most aspects of her economic and international political life, Bhutan is dependent on India.

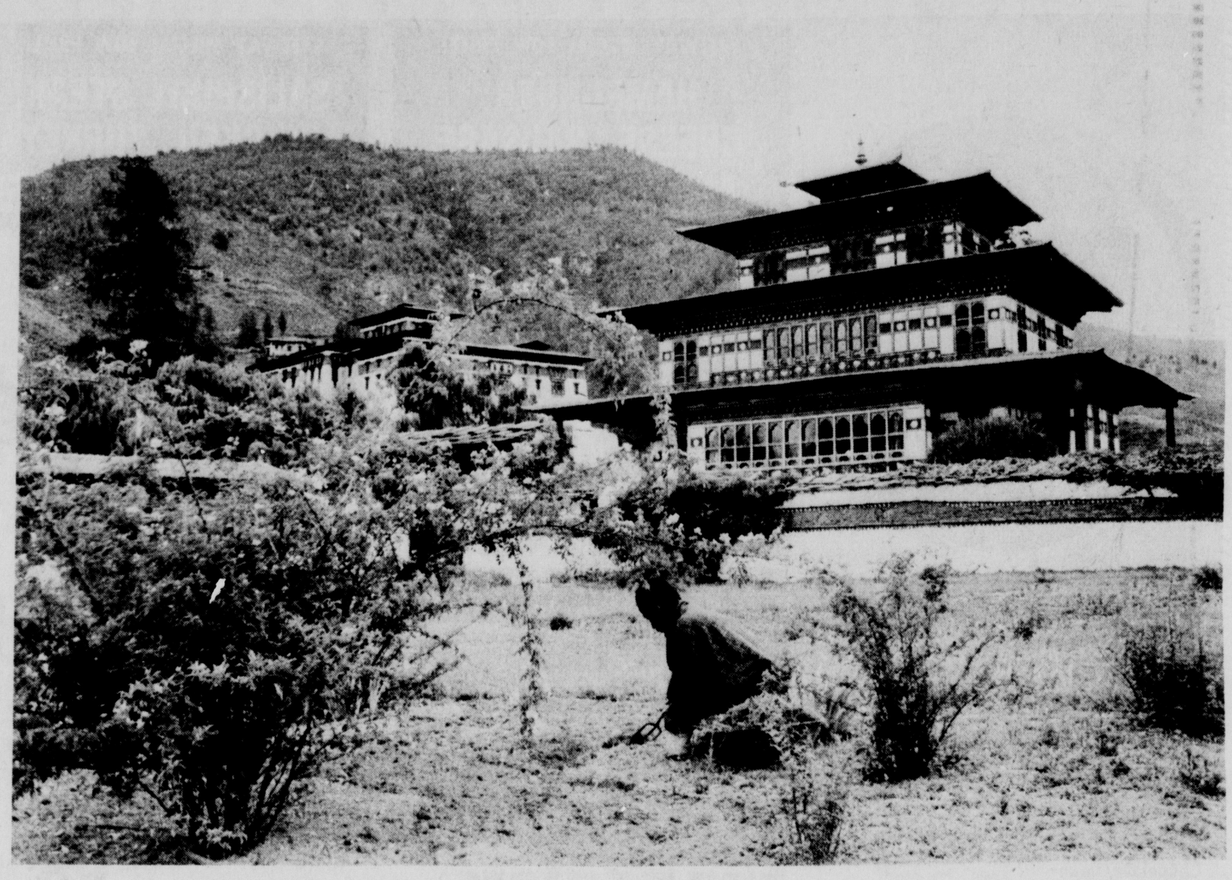

The other elephant is China.

"It is better not to be too close to China," said the foreign minister, "but our relations are good."

Citizens of New Bhutan

Bhutanese children stop to talk on a mountain footpath in the Paro valley of Bhutan. The once isolated kingdom is now rushing to catch up with the twentieth century — and its children are growing up in a society changing fast. Education is high on the national budget: there are 92 schools now, compared to two fifty years ago. (AP)

Himalayan Valley blooms

A gardener works in the grounds of the Royal summer palace at Paro, some 45 miles from Thimphu, the capital of Bhutan. Paro is one of the Himalayan kingdom's high valleys, resembling those of Switzerland, now beginning to echo with the noise of car horns and to show such scars of encroaching civilization as tin roofs and power lines.

Customs officer likes post

By GREGG HERRINGTON .

NIGHTHAWK, Wash. (AP) — At this isolated and awesomely beautiful spot on the Canadian border, Warren Hood stands as America's first and last defense against tax cheats and smugglers.

Hood is the U.S. Customs Service man here and the only resident at the border crossing.

Hood works and lives here, 12 miles west of Oroville in Okanogan County. A vistor's first thought approaching the vehicle inspection station is that whoever has the job was transferred here as some sort of bureaucratic punishment.

But that's not the case with Hood. He says he transferred to Nighthawk four years ago because he wanted "to get away from the rat race" and the Sweet Grass, Mont., border crossing.

"I find this a very interesting job," Hood says. "There are no two days alike because the people are different. I enjoy talking to them. Some people come through here and answer you with a 'yes' and a 'no' and a 'yes.' But the next guy tells you where he's been, how many fish he's caught and what he thinks of Canada. That, to me, is interesting."

The Nighthawk border crossing station is open 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. daily. A Canadian customs officer, working out of his inspection station across the road, checks cars entering Canada while Hood checks those entering the United States.

At 5 o'clock every day they close and padlock the gate across the road, forcing traffic to detour back around through Oroville, Wash., and Osoyoos, British Columbia.

The Canadian guard drives to his home in Osoyoos like any other commuter at the end of the working day, leaving Hood alone on the high prairie in the shadow of nearby mountains.

Hood lives just a few feet away in a single-story frame house that he rents from the U.S. government, unfurnished, for $110 a month.

"Not everyone would want this job. Nor is this a job for everyone," Hood says. "A lot of people couldn't stand this isolation. I enjoy it. It's quiet. It's peaceful out here. You enjoy the fresh air; you can hear the birds sing and see an occasional coyote."

Hood, 53, is a trim, slightly built Air Force retiree who could pass for someone 10 years younger.

On a typical summer week day, Hood said, 20 to 25 cars will pass through his border station. A holiday weekend has brought as many as 68 and, he says, there have been two or three snowy winter days in four years when no one has driven through.

★ ★ ★

The light traffic flow would be even lighter, Hood says, if everybody knew where they were going.

"A good percentage of the people think they're headed for Oroville" and accidentally get sidetracked through Nighthawk.

As he talked, a family of tourists from Louisiana traveling in a motor home drove up. The driver asked Hood where he had missed the turn to Oroville.

Hood said that while he enjoys talking to the people, the vehicle inspections themselves are overwhelmingly routine. Occasionally, he says, he finds someone with marijuana but has never found any hard narcotics.

Two young men dressed in grubby clothes drove up in a station wagon. Hood went through their car more thoroughly than he had the Louisiana family's vehicle. The youths would be Hood's last customers of the day and he had nothing but time.

He didn't find any unauthorized belongings.

"You make an assessment about each car that comes through," Hood said. "I look for a quick picture based on the occupants, the vehicle and the contents and proceed from there."

He said he just asks questions of about 30 per cent of those who pass through and actually looks through parts of the car on the other 70 per cent.

Hood works 11 straight days and is then off for three. He usually goes to his vacation home near Spokane and the Customs Service sends a relief officer from Oroville.

Hood wears a pistol but says he has only had to use it to shoot rattlesnakes.

Buddhist sanctum

Inside the monastery of Paro, Bhutan, the meditative glance of a monk rests on his traditional surroundings. The conservative influence of the Buddhist lamas is waning in Bhutan's newly modernistic society. This monastery once overlooked a secluded valley; now the monks look out over one of the country's two airfields, recently enlarged for the tourist trade. (AP)

Police officers favor present merit system

The entire Sedalia police department favors continuation of the merit system because of the increased job security and retirement benefits such a system affords, Police Chief William Miller told members of the Sedalia Noon-Day Optimist Club at their weekly meeting Tuesday at the Bothwell Hotel.

The police department merit system, Miller noted, is currently in effect in every third-class city in the state. The elected police chief system, he said, would allow a political party to control the department.

In other business, Morris Byrum requested five new board members for the Sedalia Boy's Club. It was also announced that the installaton of officers banquet will be held at 7 p.m. Oct. 1 at the Walnut Hills Country Club. In addition, a club board meeting is scheduled for noon, Sept. 26.

Installed by club president, Dr. J. Edgar Harvey as a new member was Kent Funk.

The invocation was offered by Dr. K. L. Holdren.

Council gets low bid for moving day

The executive committee of the University of Missouri Extension Center Tuesday night awarded a $375 moving bid to Ditzfeld Transfer Co., 1801 East 13th. The Extension Center will be moving, on or about Oct. 1, from its present location in the Federal Building to the Securities Building, 1806 West 11th.

Extension Council chairman Dr. J.R. Houchens, said this bid was the lowest of four received by the council. The top bid was for $989.

The Ditzfeld bid was lower, according to Dr. Houchens, because the Extension staff will be doing the packing. He said the packing would probably start a couple of days before the actual moving.

Fish can be both lazy and smart, says Warren Zeiller, curator at the Miami Seaquarium. Hammerhead sharks have been seen swimming into a strong current, gulping fish flowing past them.

U.S. Constitution may be target

By EVANS WITT
Associated Press Writer

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Buoyed by its successful drive for a strict California campaign reform law, the People's Lobby is now talking about amending the U.S. Constitution so citizens can propose laws through petitions.

Joyce Koupal, director of the Los Angeles-based activist organization formed in 1968, says an office is being opened in Washington, D.C., to contact congressmen and to coordinate efforts in other states.

"What this means is that we want to put the initiative (petition) process and the vote of confidence process into the Constitution," she said. "We want to make potential presidential candidates understand it could be an exciting solution they could offer.

"We can successfully put this into the presidential campaign," said Mrs. Koupal, whose husband is the group's executive director. "We will put a president into the White House on this issue."

The initiative petition long has been used as a tool for the citizens to propose legislation or amendments to the state constitution

To make the ballot, a proposed constitutional amendment requires the signatures of 8 per cent of the number of voters casting ballots in the last election for governor or 520,806 until after this November. An initiative drive to put a new law into the statutes takes 5 per cent of the last gubernatorial vote, 325,504.

The legislature also can put proposed constitutional amendments to the voters by a two-thirds vote of each house.

The controversial campaign reform measure was Proposition 9 on the June 4 ballot in California and passed by more than 2 to 1. It imposes campaign spending limits, restricts lobbying activities and sets up a commission to oversee campaign practices.

"Keep controversy at a minimum — never debate" and "Your organization does not have to be visible to be effective" are two pieces of the advice the People's Lobby gives other groups in a recently published booklet.

"Debate only gives a platform to your opposition and causes confusion in the minds of people who are listening," Mrs. Koupal said. "If people are confused, they tend to vote no. Of course, with a candidate, It's different."

Asked if people should be kept ignorant of the issues so they will vote blindly for an initiative, Mrs. Koupal said:

"That's the way the professionals do it and we studied the professionals. That's the way we win right now. As initiatives are used more and more and the educational process gets going so that people aren't fooled by a slick public relations firm, that won't hold water. That's what we're waiting for.

"We're winning because we're not stupid."

She also said work with persons who influence community opinion is more important that sending out press releases.

Amtrak proposes upgrading tracks

WASHINGTON (AP) — Amtrak, the national rail passenger service, proposes to spend $1.5 billion over five years to upgrade deteriorating tracks and roadbeds and make other capital improvements.

In a plan sent to Congress and the Department of Transportation on Monday, Amtrak said $1 billion of the total would be earmarked for tracks and roadbeds in the major rail corridors of the East, Middle West and West Coast.

The aim, a spokesman said, would be to permit high-speed service — up to 110 miles per hour on some routes — on the Amtrak network.

"Track speeds have been going downhill" because of poor track conditions, and the financial problems of the railroad industry have meant "the last wheel to get the grease has been the track," the spokesman said.

At present, he said, passenger trains on the New York-Washington, D.C., route can attain speeds of 110 m.p.h., but others, such as those between Chicago and Detroit, are held to between 40 and 60 m.p.h.

Roadbed and track improvements would be focused in a dozen major corridors: Washington-Boston, New York-Buffalo, Philadelphia-Harrisburg, Washington-Richmond, Chicago-Detroit, Chicago-St. Louis, Chicago-Cincinnati, Chicago-Milwaukee, Chicago-Carbondale, Ill., Chicago-Quincy, Ill., Los Angeles-San Diego and Seattle-Portland.

The speed goals range from 75 m.p.h. on the Seattle-Portland route to 110 m.p.h on the Chicago-Detroit, Washington-Boston and New York-Buffalo routes.

"To get better service as far as comfort and safety and speed is concerned, you've got to put that money into the roadbed," the Amtrak spokesman said. "There has to be a major public commitment of funds if you're ever going to get a rail passenger service that the public is going to use."

Of the remaining $500 million, $272.5 million would be used to acquire maintenance and repair facilities now operated by the private railroads on whose tracks Amtrak trains run.

The remainder would be spent for 235 new double-deck passengers cars, 200 single-level coaches, 25 electric engines and for unspecified "major facilities."

HFC is approving fewer loans

By JOSEPH R. TYBOR
Associated Press Writer

CHICAGO (AP) — Household Finance Corp., which traditionally counsels "Never Borrow Money Needlessly" is beginning to tell some prospective customers they're better off not borrowing at all.

HFC says its rate of approving new customers is off by nearly 20 per cent, and there are signs this is the trend throughout the $44 billion-a-year consumer loan industry.

This could hurt lower middle-income families, who often use consumer loans to get through economic tight spots.

While officials of HFC, one of the largest firms in the industry, say they have no policy to constrain credit, the approval rate of loans to new customers has gone down from 37 to 30 per cent.

One of the reasons, says HFC vice chairman P.C. Nagel, is that "our standards, because of money costs, have tightened up a bit."

The problem lies in the interest rates finance companies have to pay for money they themselves loan out. The short-term rates to the companies have risen to the point where the squeeze is being felt in sharply lower first-half profits.

There are more than 1,000 big and small finance companies operating out of more than 20,000 offices around the nation. Consumers who need extra cash to meet emergency expenses or to consolidate debts are charged interest rates of up to 36 per cent.

That rate depends on the size of the loan and regulations which vary from state to state.

Most borrowers who go to finance companies have annual incomes under $9,000, industry statistics show.

Much of their business is with high-risk customers. Delinquent loans are routinely considered part of their overhead.

If a person can't get a loan through a finance company, he probably can't get a commercial loan through any legitimate means, said Robert Gibson, head of the nonprofit National Foundation for Consumer Credit in Washington.

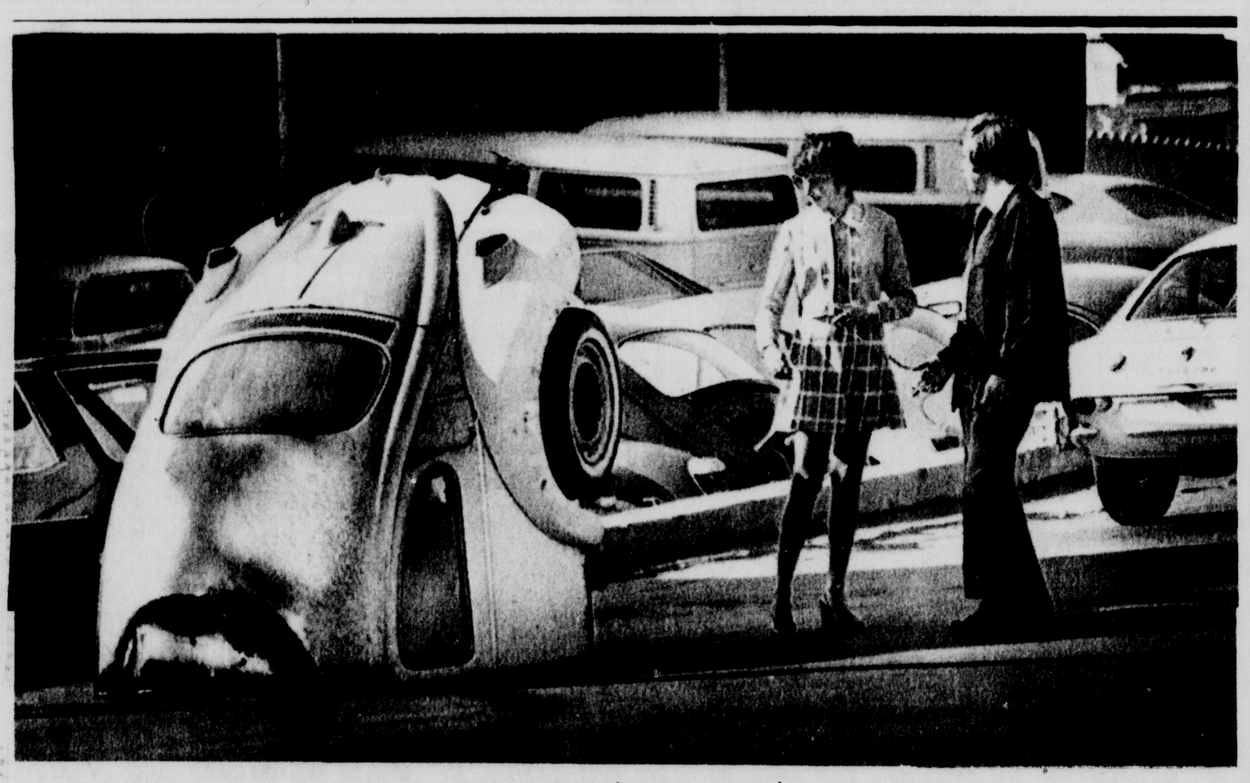

HFC made more than $64 million last year on its finance operations. First-half profits this year were down by 12 per cent.

"Obviously, the industry is hurting very badly," said Carl Hawver, executive vice president of the National Consumer Finance Association, the industry's trade organization.

He said if interest rates stay high for an extended time, loans will be cut back until states allow them to jack up the interest rates on consumer loans.

Gibson said most loan companies have already begun to cut back and he is worried about the possible social implications.

Nagel says persons with low seniority in the automotive and related industries are more likely to be rejected this year because of possible layoffs.

Retirement investment today's Silver Dollar City

By ROBERT MACY
Associated Press Writer

SILVER DOLLAR CITY, Mo. (AP) — What do you do when you've got a 99-year lease on a huge hole in the ground?

If you're Jack or Pete Herschend ... mighty well, thank you!

Mrs. Herschend, her husband and their two teenage boys came to this area in 1950 looking for a retirement investment in the Ozark hills—far away from the bustle of Chicago where he was a sales executive.

They found it in Marvel Cave 10 miles west of the then sleepy resort town of Branson.

The $35,000 they invested seemed like the world. Today the investment has grown into this Ozark community valued at more than $20 million that has drawn a million-plus visitors for five straight years.

That first year there were 11 employes at the cave, including Jack, 16, and Pete, 14, who acted as tour guides, maintenance men and carpenters. Their mother, whose previous experience was limited to running a household and serving as parttime librarian in Wilmette, Ill., was head cashier and bookkeeper, among other things. They lived in a small cabin at the entrance to the cave grounds. Their three months of efforts that first summer netted them $16,000 from 5,000 visitors. Hugo Herschend remained in Chicago with his sales work, but lent assistance during frequent visits each summer.

The folks in the hills around Branson didn't take too kindly to Mrs. Herschend's flooty ways right off. It seemed she was used to luxuries—like running water and a telephone. Electricity had come to these hills just two years before the Herschends, and folks saw no need to rush things.

But the edict was down. Mary Herschend had running water—or the hills didn't have Mary Herschend. She could wait on the telphone—and did—for another four years.

In 1955, Hugo suffered a fatal heart attack, leaving behind a widow and two sons with a lease on a cave. Mary remained in the Ozarks—not without misgivings—while Jack finished his service with the Marine Corps and Pete completed college at the University of Missouri.

Meanwhile, the Army Corps of Engineers had dreams of taming the White River by building Table Rock Dam and Reservoir. It would change the course of this area's history and the future of the Herschends.

In April 1960, just months after the opening of the dam, Silver Dollar City's Main Street swung open to its first visitors. The six stores represented a replica of a town by the same name that sood near this spot in the 1880s until renegade Baldknobbers put the torch to it late in the decade.

The idea of the old town was born by Hugo Herschend in 1954 when he spoke of the public liking to see the natives of these hills as they were in that era.

★ ★ ★

The initial village included a blacksmith shop, candy store, log cabin, church, clothing store, and printing shop—a far cry from the vast expanse people see today.

The cave had attracted 100,000 in 1959. But the Herschends were hardly ready for the 200,000 that descended on them the next year with the opening of their small village.

In 1961 they added an old grist mill, complete with a huge waterwheel that is still one of the attractions here.

The following year it was an authentic train that carried visitors around the park. Little did the scores of thousands who would ride the train that year know the 15 minute stop when the train was "robbed" by hill outlaws was simply a guise to allow the puffing steam engine to get its breath before making it up one last hill and back to the main station.

By 1965 the town was really rolling in high gear—despite a couple of near-disastrous fires. That was the first year Mrs. Herschend took any money out in salary. The policy of the family had always been to reinvest profits.

The initial lease covered 640 acres; now the city has 2,000.

The reason, says Pete, is to control the future growth of the area and keep this famous hill country just that.

Looking back, Pete reflects on what he calls the "topsy-like growth" by saying every day they "turned a new corner." He said that growth has been coincidental with nostalgia.

Pete is now serving his second term as head of the Missouri Tourism Commission. He speaks proudly of the city's apprenticeship program—giving young people in these hills a chance to learn a trade that will enable them to fill in here as the city's elderly retire.

Meanwhile, the staff of 11 has grown to more than 700 during the city's 26-week season— which stretches through October with its craft festival—and more than 250 employes off-season. The Herschend brothers have taken over full management of the city while their mother takes a well-deserved rest.

And with 190 phone extensions here, there's no longer any worry about driving the 10 miles to Branson to make a call.

She can feel it

More entertainers on city streets

By DOLORES BARCLAY
Associated Press Writer

"My music belongs to all people, and what better way to give it than outside, on the street," said Vincent Taylor as he stood on tiptoe in front of a sparkling steel drum on New York's Fifth Avenue.

He strained, stretched and gyrated his way through a difficult but melodious chord, as curious onlookers oohed and ahhed at the tinkling music he produced from the drum.

Taylor, 29-year-old native of Trinidad, is one of a growing group of entertainers performing on city streets across the nation.

Their reasons for being on the sidewalks are as varied as their acts: chamber music trios, puppeteers, magicians, mimes, painters, tap dancers, jazz, folk and classical musicians and poets.

Some of the pavement performers are students of political science, economics and history. Others are unemployed professional artists who find street entertaining good for picking up business contacts. Most street performers say they earn their living through the sidewalk shows. But some are there to supplement other incomes or to entertain just for the fun of it.

"We just did it for fun because we liked the music and wanted to do it in the streets; that's how this music originated," said Sue Dent of the Merrie England Madrigal Singers in San Francisco. Miss Dent, 22, a music student at Chabot College in Hayward, Calif., said the group collects about $10 per hour on weekends.

John Corthorn, 27, is a master's degree candidate in urban planning at the University of Denver. He plays the guitar and sings folk songs in the Larimer Square vicinity in downtown Denver, making anywhere from $5 to $20 a day.

Bearded Jerry Desault, 21, of Concord, N.H., can be found sitting on a green blanket near Copley Square on Boylston Street in Boston playing his flute. In front of him stands a small tin can.

"My only expense is food," he said. "Sincere remarks and sincere smiles make my day." Desault makes about $125 a week, although he attracts fewer people than the jugglers on Boston Common.

Boston, like most cities, has an ordinance against soliciting — no signs or verbal requests for money.

Desault said the police are pretty tolerant of him and other street entertainers so long as sidewalks are not blocked nd entertainers do not create nuisances.

But steeldrummer Taylor says he is sometimes chased away from desirable spots by New York police when crowds form to listen.

Robert Manny, a flutist in Portland, Ore., was arrested recently for playing in the downtown area. Manny, 33, usually puts a can or his open flute case at the base of his music stand, and stray coins usually end up there.

But Manny told the court that he never asks for money, he just plays his flute and lets the coins fall where they may. The district attorney's office had the case dismissed.

Man is killed in altercation with his wife

DONIPHAN, Mo. (AP) — Carl Henry "Cotton" Smith, 31, of Doniphan, was shot to death Tuesday in an altercation with his wife, Mildre, at a tavern six miles east of Doniphan, the highway patrol said.

The Smiths and a woman friend spent nearly four hours in the tavern before Mrs. Smith went out to her car, took a .22 automatic rifle from the trunk and fired two bullets into Smith, who had followed her outside, the patrol said.

Trooper Ronald Berry of the patrol said it was discovered later that Mrs. Smith had swallowed a large quantity of pills, so she was taken to a hospital and her stomach was pumped.

Art works received

ST. LOUIS (AP)—The St. Louis Art Museum has received a multimillion-dollar gift of six major art works, museum officials said Tuesday.

Among the works bequeathed to the museum by Mrs. Mark C. Steinberg were four paintings, a bronze sculpture and a pastel, representing the work of Van Gogh, Degas, Cezánne and Gauguin.

An official said the works were technically given to the museum during the mid-1950s, but had remained in Mrs. Steinberg's home until her death. Mrs. Steinberg died Aug. 31.

The two Van Goghs, "Factory at Clichy" and "Vineyards at Auvers" brings to four the number of major Van Goghs in the museum collection.

The Degas works include a pastel and a bronze of ballet dancers.

The Cezanne is a small painting in his famous "Bathers" series and the Gauguin painting is a small character study.

The works are scheduled to go on public display Nov. 14.

Pride' facelift for Detroit

DETROIT (AP) — Pride is said to be uplifting, but for this city it also leads to facelifting.

The program, which began in 1970, involved some 125,000 residents as well as Detroit businessmen who contributed $25,000 to pay for supplies and promotional material. Fire stations passed out 250,000 trash bags and police precincts distributed bumper stickers and posters. The Detroit Department of Public Works sent 1,000 men and 250 sanitation trucks on special runs throughout the city, while the Michigan National Guard assigned 50 trucks and 200 men to patrol the area, collecting debris too heavy or bulky for the sanitation trucks to handle.

Driver examiners' jobs risky affair at times

By TOM MAUPIN
Democrat-Capital Staff Writer

Most drivers can expect a few accidents in their lifetime. But few motorists or passengers are involved in at least two accidents a month. Few persons other than Ray Brown and Ken Percival.

Brown and Percival are members of the Missouri Highway Patrol driver examiners unit, and the possibility of an accident on the job is part of their work.

"We get about two accidents a month," Supervisor Brown said. "After the first one I wasn't sure if this was the right job for me or not."

Brown has been a civilian employe of the Highway Patrol since his graduation from the first examiner's class in 1955. At that time, Brown said, the examiners numbered only 36 in Missouri. Now there are more than 150, he added.

His first accident on the job was the worst in property damage, Brown said. The damage totaled $350, "but now, of course, it would be more," he said.

"At first you look for accidents," Brown said. "Nowadays you don't look for them as much. After a few years you get relaxed and after so long it just turns into another job."

Brown remembers one incident where a young lady drove him up five steps. He said the mishap happened a few years ago at the corner of Broadway and Hancock, at the former Washington Park location.

"There were five steps right on the corner of the park. I told her to make a right hand turn off of Broadway onto Hancock. And she drove right to the top of those five steps," Brown said.

Once in Warsaw, Brown said, a woman drove off without him, after he had checked her turn signals.

"I told her to turn on her right signal and she did. Then I told her turn on the left. She did that, but she also turned left into the street and left me standing there. All I could do was shout, 'Wait!' "

Percival has been at the job for seven years and has also been involved in accidents, but none stood out in his mind.

"They've all gotten to be so commonplace it's hard to tell them apart," he said. Percival did remember the woman who ordered him out of her car, however.

"She had failed the driving test and I was telling her what she did wrong. She just sat there looking at the steering wheel and said, 'You just get out of my car. I'm tired of hearing about it.' "

Besides the accidents, Brown and Percival have to face the motorists who fail the written or driving test.

"People think they have a God-given right to drive," Brown said. "They think it's my fault if they fail their test. All I can do is mark their test."

Brown said over the years some hopeful drivers have gotten very angry with him, but usually calm down. He said when they do fail a test the only thing to do is to tell them the time of the next one.

"You can't argue with them. Anything you would say would be the wrong thing at that time," Brown said.

The two examiners say young drivers today are better than a few years ago. They cited high school drivers' education courses as the reason for this.

"When you get in the car it doesn't take long to tell who has taken the drivers' ed course, and who hasn't," Brown said. "Drivers' education is the greatest thing that can happen to a kid."

One type of motorists who usually resents taking the driving test is the person who recently moved to the state. Brown said many times they accept the written test but the idea of testing their driving skills is offensive to them.

"They can't understand why they have to take the driving test. And I can't answer that except that's the way the law is written," Brown said.

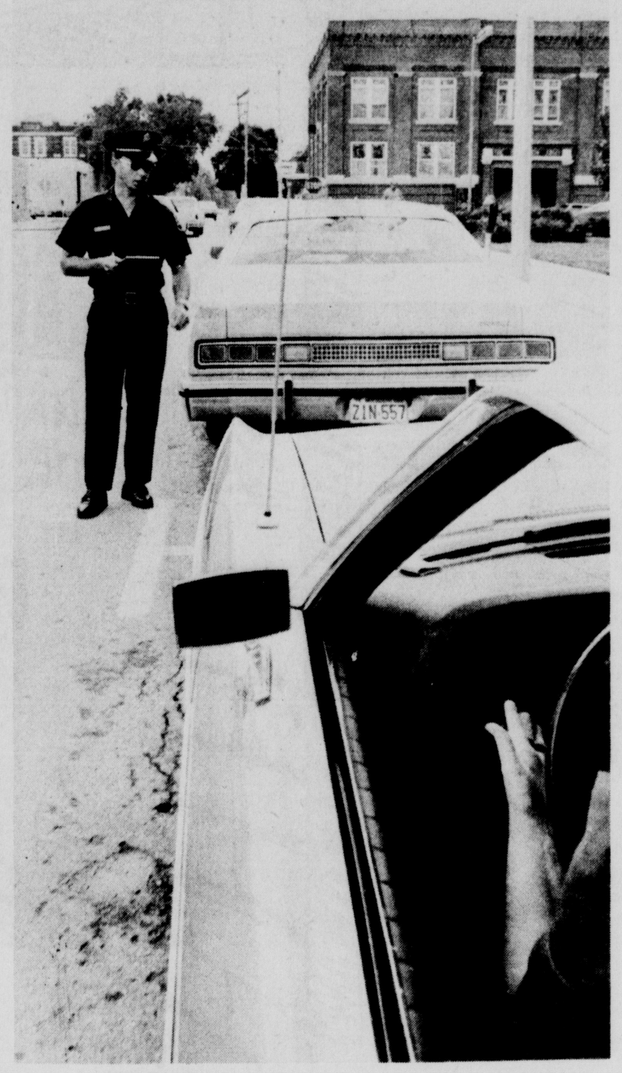

With the possibility of an accident, frustrated exam takers and the rest of the headaches of the job the pair seem to enjoy their work. Their territory includes Pettis, Johnson, Benton and Henry counties, but even with that area they are both able to spend evenings with their families.

Percival looks back over his seven years with satisfaction with his selection of careers. "Mine turned out the way I wanted it to," he said.

Before becoming an examiner Percival worked as a small engine mechanic. He said work was off in the winter and he was looking for, "an easier job and one that was steady."

Brown wanted to be a member of the Highway Patrol, but the height regulations were raised and he lost out.

Brown did say at times the job has seemed routine, but on the whole, "it boils down to working with people."

Lawyer sentenced on drug violation

KANSAS CITY (AP) — Patrick Murray Keating, Kansas City lawyer, was sentenced Tuesday to five years in prison for a drug violation.

The sentence had been recommended by a Jackson County Circuit Court jury which convicted Keating May 31 on a charge of possessing 54 stimulant pills. The state contended the lawyer intended to pass the pills to a prisoner in the county jail.

Judge Richard P. Sprinkle allowed Keating to remain free under $1,000 bond pending an appeal.

Federal employes protest pay increase deferral

By LEE BYRD
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Ford's deferral of a 5.5 per cent pay boost for federal employes has drawn a fusillade of protest from labor, and shapes up as a major test of his persuasive powers with Congress.

Ford has postponed the scheduled Oct. 1 raise until Jan. 1, thereby saving the federal payroll $700 million in the name of fighting inflation. Federal employes unions want Congress to restore the original date.

Beyond that, such groups as the National Federation of Federal Employes, the American Federation of Government Employes and the National Treasury Employes Union are lobbying for a larger boost. Most are united behind an AFL-CIO proposal of 8.4 per cent.

Their reasoning centers on an inflation rate hovering around 12 per cent, plus government surveys showing increases in private industry wages of 6.3 to 7.1 per cent—surveys which are six months out of date.

Under the Federal Pay Comparability Act, Ford's delay of the pay hike—affecting 1.4 million civilians and 2.2 million military employes—can be overturned by a simple majority in either the House or Senate.

As president, Richard M. Nixon succeeded in postponing similar boosts for two successive years, but his third try in 1973 was overturned by the Senate.

"As far as federal employes are concerned, President Ford is a second-hand Nixon," says Nathan Wolkomir, president of the 120,000-member National Federation of Federal Employes. "Ford had the opportunity to prove to the career service that he really cared ... but he blew it. He showed he really doesn't understand."

Vincent Connery, president of the 50,000-member Treasury Employes Union, vowed "a rather massive protest" to Congress. The law allows 30 days for Congress to act, and Sept. 30 is the deadline.

Already the wheels are turning. Sen. Ted Stevens, R-Alaska, has introduced a resolution to overturn the delay, joined by Sens. Frank Moss, D-Utah, J. Glenn Beall, Robert Dole, R-Kan., and Mike Gravel, D-Alaska.

Chairman Gale McGee of the Senate Civil Service Committee is sympathetic, and has set hearings on the proposal. The Wyoming Democrat believes both that the increase should be higher and that it should come Oct. 1.

Even Sen. William Proxmire, D-Wis., a frequent critic of inflationary federal spending, has endorsed an October implementation. So has Senate Majority Whip Robert C. Byrd, D-W.Va.

While the federal bureaucrat can point to a number of statistics to show that his standard of living is slipping, there is still evidence aplenty that this lot isn't all that bad compared to other American workers. For example:

—A comprehensive survey by the Commerce Department showed that in 1973 the average salary for the federal civilian worker, including blue-collar jobs, was $13,000. In private industry it was $8,900.

—A Civil Service Commission survey of 12 leading private employers showed that none provided better fringe benefits than the federal service. Most notable in that area is the government's pension plan. It provides the retired worker up to 80 per cent of his salary, with guaranteed cost of living protection. While that's four to five times better than Social Security, the cost to the worker is about the same.

—A Library of Congress report showed that while average military pay was $6,587.14 a year, a factor which tends to lower the salary averages government-wide, the man in uniform collected thousands in supplementary advantages. These included $1,440 for housing, $598 for food, $473 in federal tax benefits, $831 for "special items" such as hazardous duty, clothing and proficiency, $770 for medical care, $98 in commissary and exchange discounts and $1,266 in retirement credits.

The salaries of federal workers began a dramatic surge during the Kennedy administration in an effort to attract better-qualified applicants. In the past decade, the civilian branch has received a dozen substantial raises, and boosts for the military, particularly since its conversion to an all-voluntary force, have more than quadrupled pay levels in some cases.

The result is that while the entire government payroll, including the now-independent Postal Service, has remained static at about 5 million employes, the cost has more than doubled to $60 billion.

White-collar jobs for college graduates start at the GS-5 level, where "step 1" will pay about $8,500 presuming the upcoming increase holds at 5.5 per cent. Almost automatically, such an employe will be promoted to GS-7 after one year, GS-9, in another year, GS-11 two years after that, and then GS-12 in another two years.

Hence in seven years, he would be at a level with a salary range now set for $18,500 to $24,000.

While unions and some congressmen complain that that's not enough, the Civil Service Commission is swamped with applicants. Last year, 459,000 persons applied for 83,000 clerical openings; 187,500 applied for 12,500 junior executive slots; and 24,000 applied for 7,800 openings in engineering and scientific jobs.

New estimates on 1974 grain production readied

AP Farm Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Government crop anlysts prepared today to issue new estimates of 1974 grain production, including updated figures on the drought-battered corn crop sorely needed to help rebuild consumer food supplies next year.

Shudders were felt around the world a month ago when the Agriculture Department forecast that the corn crop — the main U.S. grain for feeding meat animals, dairy cows and poultry — would total less than 4.97 billion bushels, 12 per cent less than last year.

USDA had projected last spring 1974 corn production likely would total 6.7 billion bushels.

The new report, to be issued later today, was based on surveys made the first of the month. Besides new estimates for corn, it will include updated forecasts for soybeans, wheat, cotton and other crops.

Although some private forecasters have predicted recently that corn and soybean production will be up from August indications because of widespread rains the past month, USDA officials indicate those increases will not be great.

Further, the new estimates are based on indications as of Sept. 1. Since then, unseasonable cold weather has intruded into the Corn Belt and raised the threat that killing frosts may reduce corn and soybean prospects further.

The department said Tuesday in a weekly weather report that the corn crop is behind normal in all major producing states. The crop in Iowa was 25 per cent mature enough to be safe from frost by last weekend, compared with 35 per cent normally on the date, the report said.

The Illinois corn crop was also 25 per cent safe from frost, less than one-half the usual maturity of 52 per cent by early September.

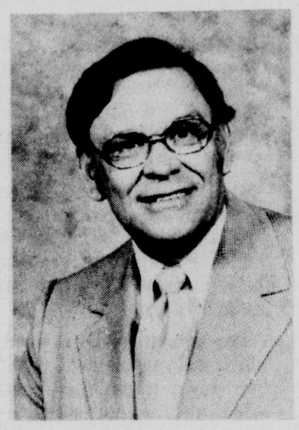

As a result of reduced yields from late maturity and summer drought, grain prices have gone up in recent weeks, an indication it will be more costly to feed cattle, hogs, poultry and dairy cows through most of 1975 at least.

WASHINGTON (AP) — A popular economic indicator used for more than a quarter of a century to tell how efficient American farmers are has been quietly abandoned by the Agriculture Department.

The statistic involves the number of people one U.S. farmer can supply with food, fiber and other agricultural raw materials. For example, in 1972—the final year calculated—one farm worker supplied enough for himself and 51.4 others.

Agricultural authorities for many years have cited the figures with pride to illustrate the increasing productivity of American farmers. Agriculture Secretary Earl L. Butz has used the statistic, although decisions were made by subordinates to abandon the indicator.

Department economists set up the statistical series in 1974 and used information to compare farm output back to the year 1820. At that time, the records show, one farmer produced enough for himself and 3.1 others. The figures did not change much through the 19th century.

U.S. airlines slip

America's international airlines, which pioneered the field, are in trouble. The industry's leader, Pan American Airways, is asking the federal government for a $10.2 million-a-month subsidy which it says is necessary to keep its planes flying.

Greatly increased fuel costs and other operating expenses are a big factor in the airline's plight, which is shared, to a lesser extent, by Trans World Airlines, the nation's other major international carrier.

American companies are also losing out to foreign competition. Airlines such as Air France, BOAC and Lufthansa are owned by their governments, and consequently don't have to turn a profit.

Merger talk is going on between Pan Am and TWA as one possible step to alleviate the problem. We may very well be at the point where the United States cannot afford to field two major international carriers.

Influential Sen. William Proxmire has informed the Civil Aeronautics Board that he opposes a subsidy for Pan Am. The Wisconsin Democrat says the airline should be allowed to go under, rather than open the door to subsidies that would have no end.

Proxmire is blunt, but probably right. The recognition that international air travel may be one of those areas in which free enterprise cannot compete with state socialism — and remain free enterprise — would seem to be the inescapable conclusion.

Ann in wonderland

Of all the ga-ga-eyed Americans to visit Communist China, Ann Landers' brain seems to have been laundered the most thoroughly.

In an interview with the Chicago Sun-Times following her recent trip, the syndicated columnist gushes on about such marvels of Chinese society as health care, polite, disciplined children, "liberated" women, etc, etc.

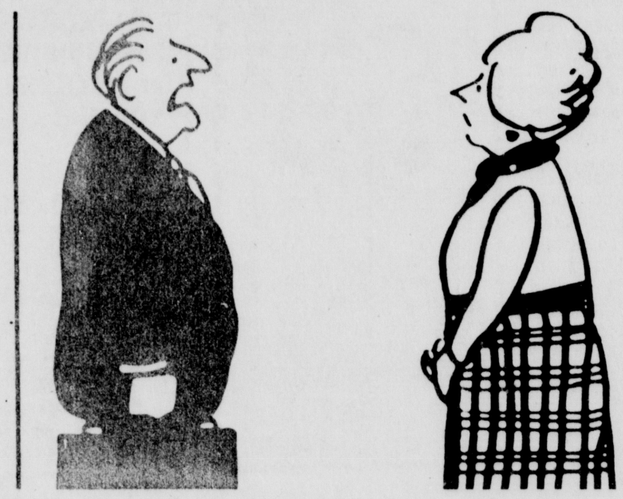

Her main interest was the Chinese "family unit," Miss Landers reports, which must have posed some problems since the Communists have effectively rendered the family, as we know it, obsolete. As she reports, children are turned over to a state nursery at the age of 4 and are seen by their parents only on Sundays.

Chinese children also get a "fine education," reports Ann. That depends upon whether your definition of education is synonymous with political indoctrination, which constitutes the bulk of Chinese schooling.

Miss Landers concludes that her brand of journalism wouldn't be needed in China because it is not a "troubled" society.

Thank you, Ann, for that bit of hard-nosed investigative reporting. But we think you'd better stick to advice to the love-lorn.

"I've cancelled my trip to Washington for the 'economic summit' — I'm going into bankruptcy instead!"

Mediocre men in our Congress

By RAY CROMLEY
NEA News Analyst

WASHINGTON — The problem is not the President is too strong. It is rather that Congress is too weak — not weak in power, but in ability.

Cromley

Any reporter who consistently visits the Hill reads endless press releases from mediocre men grasping for publicity. They jump at consumer protection, antipollution, aid for the poor, help for veterans and the unemployed, not because these are worthy causes, but because they bring headlines.

Recently, a nationally prominent senator refused, through his public relations man, to see one of the abler reporters in this town. 'What can you do for my man?' was the question asked and the reason given for refusal.

If you doubt this attitude, skim the thousands of laws these men propose each year, determine how many have substance. When the energy crisis hit this nation full tilt, within days hundreds of bills were thrown into the hopper. Few had input from energy experts. Few made practical sense. Some, if adopted, would have brought disaster. The sponsors could have cared less; they had "shown" constituents they were on the ball.

Few men on the hill have any idea as to the merits or demerits of much of the legislation on which they vote. In most cases, interviewing a senator or representative for insight into a national problem, whether inflation, foreign affairs, defense spending or government reform, is a ho-hum experience. Most don't know what they are talking about. Reporters wouldn't bother except that a congressman is always good for a quote.

In this mass of mediocrity there are a number of very able men — a nucleus, with dedicated staffs, determined to become experts in one area or another. The drones depend on them. If we take the men of considerable ability (some brilliant) and add the average men who make up for their "averageness" by hard work, we get a total which adds up to, perhaps a fourth of the Senate and House. No more.

The problem lies in ourselves.

Representatives especially know re-election depends on what they do for their constituents, not what they do for their country. And what is done for constituents must be in hard, cold terms. Polls confirm few voters know or care how their representative votes — except on pocketbook matters. What they want to know is how their congressman will intervene for them personally for a job, a scholarship, a rezoning or ... or for their friends, relatives, members of their lodge, association, union or race. Or what he will get for their district.

Or they want a friendly, likeable man. Regardless of his abilities which are considerable, surveys indicate that the people of ex-Congressman Gerald Ford's home district, which he represented for well over two decades, did not in the main know how he voted. But they liked him. He paid close attention to personal relationships and was a kind, decent man. A Ralph Nader report notes:

"A Polaroid camera perched on a tripod leans next to a grandmother clock in Representative Gerald R. Ford's office. If you and your family are down from his fifth district in Michigan, the House Republican Minority Leader will pose with you for a picture. If he's out, an obliging staff member takes your picture seated behind his desk in his red leather highbacked swivel chair looking out onto his view of Pennsylvania Avenue and all those monuments.

"'You always feel important; it's awe-inspiring,' confessed Jean McKee, Ford's ... (onetime) Democratic opponent."

This is good. This is human. This gives all of us a warm feeling. But it is not the test by which to accurately determine which man among many will make the best member of the Congress of the United States.

It is only luck when we get a Gerald Ford.

"FORGET IT."

U.S. needs slogan for Bicentennial

By JACK ANDERSON

WASHINGTON — In times past Americans have been able to distill the cause of the hour into a phrase, a rallying cry, a stirring slogan.

To recite them is to review our history. Give me liberty or give me death ... United we stand, divided we fall ... Millions for defense but not one cent for tribute ... Remember the Alamo ... Government of the people, by the people and for the people...

We must make the world safe for democracy ... The only thing we have to fear is fear itself ... Praise the Lord and pass the ammunition ... I have a dream ... Ask not what your country can do for you; ask what you can do for your country.

At this time, as we emerge from the Watergate nightmare into the dawn's early light, as we near 200 years under a common flag as a free and progressing people, are there the right words to reaffirm our faith in America?

The Bicentennial has need of a slogan, which will capsulate the past 200 years and ring down through the next 200 years. Amid all the hopes and conflicts that distract and divide us today, is there a unifying phrase, a grand motto for our Bicentennial year?

The words ought not to be the forced effort of a political ghost writer but the spontaneous eruption of some grateful citizen, some struggler in the field. We, therefore, invite the citizens of America — the school children, laborers, housewives, veterans — to express their feelings about America in a slogan.

We have an anniversary to celebrate. If you have a motto for it, a phrase that can catch the spirit and the cause of America 1976, by all means send it to Jack Anderson, 1401 16th St., N.W., Washington, D.C., 20036.

Such patriotic and civic organizations as the American Legion and the Jaycees will help us screen the slogans. The best will be selected as the slogan for the Bicentennial. The Spirit of 1976 cannot be imposed upon the country by the government but must come from the people. Putting into words our feelings about America may help us to shake off the dirt of Watergate and think constructively about our country.

For a time, it appeared that Watergate would rain on our Bicentennial parade. How could we celebrate the good old words, the hallowed guarantees, if each day was to disclose a new mockery of them? But we always thought, and sometimes wrote, that Watergate would end in a reaffirmation of the American system.

So it has. The Republic stands, stronger, more tested, than before. It stands admidst the ashes of numberless attempts at democratic government in other lands. For our people who had begun to doubt, for the world at large which has usually given short shrift to free governments, the American Bicentennial has a potential impact that ought not be lost.

Something we have — a division of powers, an idea that won't die, a faith deep in our souls — has brought freedom with order, change with stability, dissent with unity, the hazards of the free market yet, for most, a decent home and a full table.

We have survived 200 years ruled mostly by laws we collectively agreed to, rather than by the truncheons of unaccountable men; two centuries of comparative unfetteredness that enabled us to unlreash the greatest explosion of human energy and inventiveness in all history.

We have developed an endemic statecraft, on prairie, mountain and valley, that sprang up because people were allowed to practice it, a statecraft that democratized the energy explosion and largely civilized it.

There has grown a cohering trust grounded in the belief that we have had our say, whether it prevailed or not, and will have it again; a trust that has legitimized power here and permitted its peaceable transfer, by the book.

Oh, there is much we have not caught up with — swindling in our counting houses; crime, drugs and litter in our streets; a too-small share of the good life in our ghettos. But there are no tanks, no armored trucks hauling critics off to concentration camps. And in the main, Americans have a fairer share, a freer field, a better chance than was ever offered anywhere.

So let us rest from contemplating the betrayals of the dream, the exploitations of the people, the chances lost. Let us, rather, reflect, reflect on that long, torturous ascent toward the unlikely goals set by the Founding Fathers: liberty, equality, order — not for one city or one breed, but upon a continent whereon would dwell all the cantankerous races of man.

We see a progress, fitful, faltering, backsliding but ever resilient, at length discernible and in the end majestic.

Consumerism waning when we need it most

WASHINGTON — When would you figure the average American consumer might need the most protection by his government? When the businesses most likely to rip off consumers are in the most pressing need for money.

Like right now.

Rowan

Strangely, though, just when the consumer movement is most needed, it has lapsed into impotence and controversy.

A few years ago, the consumer reigned as king of the hill. Lawmakers, corporations and the executive branch of government were swayed, awed, cowed by the likes of Ralph Nader and Bess Myerson. They were convinced, or frightened, to the point of giving the little guy a better break — guys and big ones with dumb Super-Big-Brother regimentations and regulations like cars that won't start unless you fasten your seat belt — even though the village mugger is tailgating you as you hurry through the parking lot.

I don't know whether it's public revulsion at too much governmental paternalism or what, but we're seeing a lot of signs that even the very best of the consumer movement is slipping.

Item: As I noted in this space recently, a group of scientists from the Food and Drug Administration (FDA) charged that top officials in the FDA had destroyed a system of reporting adverse reactions to drugs, altered records to permit a company to put a questionable drug on the market, and harassed and intimidated scientists who produced evidence that certain drugs should be barred from sale.

Item: Lee Richardson, who resigned last month as head of the Federal Energy Administration (FEA) Office on Consumer Affairs, charged that the FEA has acted in opposition to consumer and general interests. Among other things, he said the agency did not conduct adequate investigations of oil price increases and oil company profits.

Item: A bill creating a Consumer Protection Agency (CPA) has been stalled for several weeks by a filibuster in the U.S. Senate.

This is probably the most ominous of all the dark clouds hanging over the consumer movement because the CPA could provide wide-ranging protection against abuses by the FDA, the FEA and a lot of other regulatory agencies and government departments.

Too often, as illustrated by the recent flaps in the FDA and FEA, government agencies have become protectors and advocates of the people and organizations they are supposed to regulate, rather than of the public.

someone inside government to look out for the average guy's health, safety and pocketbook — in matters like airline rates, gasoline prices, deceptive advertising, drug or school bus regulations.

The CPA is designed to be the consumer's watchdog inside government. It also could appeal federal agency decisions to courts, investigate consumer frauds and act as a clearinghouse for consumer information and complaints.

A bill creating the consumer agency was passed overwhelmingly by the House of Representatives. But it has been the victim of a Senate filibuster since mid-July.

The long-winded senators and other foes would have us believe that a consumer protection unit would be some kind of costly, bureaucratic monster. That's nonsense. Its proposed first-year budget of $15 million is not even as much as the budgets of the U.S. Chamber of Commerce or the National Association of Manufacturers, two of the business groups which have led the fight against the agency. The CPA is not a regulatory agency and would not have power to compel anything.

A bipartisan majority of senators favors establishing a consumer protection agency. So do Virginia Knauer, consumer adviser to the President, and over 100 consumer, farmer and labor groups. Supporters have compromised and stripped some of the most controversial provisions from the bill in an effort to save it.

Normally, three failures at closing off a filibuster, like three strikes, means you're out. But since the attempt to cut off debate keeps getting closer to the two-thirds needed, Senate majority leader Mike Mansfield has scheduled one last cloture vote for Sept. 18.

If the filibusterers win this time, consumers had better tighten their meager money belts, for they will once again be open-season prey of the myriad rip-off artists.

But sometimes such searches don't have a happy ending: natural parents may not be found or may reject recognition. (AP)

"Oh, why does the wind blow upon me so wild? Is it because I'm nobody's child?"

—Phila Henrietta Case

NEW YORK (AP) — Katrina Maxtone-Graham is 39 years old, the mother of four. She has wealth, a blonde sort of Ali McGraw beauty, a devoted husband, wit and intelligence, a Manhattan townhouse, summers in Europe — or wherever — and all the household help she wants.

Katrina Maxtone-Graham was also becoming suicidal.

She wandered in front of cars, she was terrified of elevators, she isolated herself from her children. She invested over 13 years on a psychiatrist's couch and $15,000 in legal fees in search of her identity.

Katrina was adopted.

She grew up as one of three adoptive children of a wealthy Michigan family. Her adoptive parents are now dead. But there were shadow memories of another place ... a piano ... a certain field ... a woman yelling at her.

Katrina wanted desperately to find her real mother, just to touch her, to see her, to find out who she really was. It was becoming an obsession. She said didn't care if her mother turned out to be the proverbial 42nd Street lady of the night. At least she would know. She also wanted to find the foster home in which she had lived until she was adopted at age 3½.

She asked for her records — sealed by law since the day her mother signed the papers to give her away.

Katrina Maxtone-Graham and others involved in a fight to get such records opened maintain that, as adults, they have a constitutional right to know the identity of their natural parents. They say they don't want to intrude on their parents; they just want the truth. More importantly, they say there is a strong psychological need to know one's roots, one's ancestry, the history of the genes one carries.

The issue is fought with strong feelings on both sides. Some say adoption records are a Pandora's box which, if opened, could rock the entire concept of adoption. How many women, now middle-aged, would fear the child they bore at 16 or 17 — and perhaps never mentioned to their husbands — would come knocking at the door? Or, how many women would welcome the chance to look once again upon the child they were forced by circumstances or society to give up, a baby whom they never gave up in their hearts?

The agency that handled Katrina's adoption predictably denied her request for records. In most states, such records can be opened only by a court order. Adoption agencies say the records are sealed to protect the confidentiality of the mother, child and the adoptive parents.

Then Katrina discovered the Adoptees Liberty Movement Association, (ALMA), founded in 1971 to help the adopted and their natural parents find each other. At last she had found someone sympathetic when she explained she simply wanted the answer to a very simple question: "Who am I?"

She took the adoption agency to court. Her psychiatrist testified that she was becoming more and more despondent, that the court would have the blood of her self-destruction on its hands if the records remained sealed.

But the social worker assigned to the case wrote that Katrina "has hostile feelings towards her natural mother and a reunion would have a detrimental effect on the natural mother and her family."

The two sides agreed an investigator would look for the mother and the mother would be able to choose whether she wanted to see Katrina. Katrina agreed to pay for the search.

But investigators turned up nothing.

So Katrina independently hired Tracers Co. of America. It found her mother in seven working days.

Katrina's mother was living in Mexico City. She received the first contact — a telephone call — in the middle of a dinner party. It was long distance from New York, and a strange voice asked to speak to Ruth Williams Ketiladze Jason. The caller, hearing the voices of the guests, suggested the recipient might wish to take it in another room.

A sixth sense told the mother who the caller was.

"I hope this is what I think it is ..." were Mrs. Jason's first words. "I hope I have found my little girl."

Ironically, Mrs. Jason had written a letter the week before to ALMA, which is Spanish for soul. Their letters — and the mother and daughter — would have found each other anyway, and without a court fight.

In the letter, Mrs. Jason wrote: "Perhaps my baby, now 39, will never look for me ... But please tell other adoptees that sometimes they are relinquished from love — and not from rejection at all."

Mrs. Jason caught the first plane from Mexico City to meet and hug the daughter she last saw when the child was two years old and calling another woman "Momma."

As Ruth Williams, she had wanted desperately to keep the baby born out of wedlock. But it was 1935, and her family had insisted that sort of thing was simply not done. It was arranged that she sign adoption papers at birth. She refused. Instead, she volunteered for work in a Salvation Army hospital to be near her daughter. After three months the baby was put in foster homes. Ruth Williams got passes to visit her on Saturdays.

One Saturday, she went to a home with her white slip of paper to visit the daughter she had named Judith Virginia Williams. But the baby wasn't there. She had been moved, once again, to another foster home. She would have six homes in all.

"What an awful, awful life for this infant, this lovely little child, to be shunted from one place to another," Mrs. Jason says. So she signed the papers — out of love, not rejection — papers that would assure her daughter a stable home, papers that would assure she would not see her again.

Until the plane from Mexico City landed in the United States.

Katrina's case is still in court. Katrina and her mother say they want the records opened. But the adoption agency says no. It says it must protect the confidentiality of the foster parents. The adoptive parents are dead.

"What nonsense," says Florence Fisher, founder of ALMA. "Whoever heard of the confidentiality of foster parents?"

The agency, Children's Aid Society, declines to discuss the case until after final litigation.

Katrina's case is a dramatic one — and a happy one. On the other hand, a young woman who lives on Long Island tracked down her mother recently. The mother, upon hearing the news that her child had found her, said: "My god, I wish you had told he I had terminal cancer instead."

The push to break open the records began more than 20 years ago when Jean Paton, an adopted child who successfully found her mother, wrote a book called "The Adopted Break Silence" and founded an organization called "Orphan Voyage."

★ ★ ★

In 1971, the movement gained new impetus when Mrs. Fisher put the following ad in the New York Times: "Adult who was an adopted child desires contact with other adoptees to exchange views on adoptive situation and for mutual assistance in search for natural parents."

Mrs. Fisher says more than 8,000 persons have written since she started ALMA, over 1,800 persons have become members. One-third are mothers looking for the babies they gave away. The rest are adopted adults searching for real parents. A handful of adoptive parents have joined to help their adoptive children search.

Psychological need to gain the records has not been established in the courtroom. The Children's Welfare League, parent organization of some 400 adoption agencies, says the agencies may think about changing their position if sufficient proof can be established regarding the psychological need of the adoptee.

Healing for mother's heartbreak

Ruth Williams Ketiladze Jason is the mother of four children whom she brought up, including her daughter Rucy with whom she is shown, in Miami. She is also the mother of one daughter she has just found again after 37 years. This daughter, her first, was born out of wedlock. Until a recent reunion, her mother had last seen this first daughter as a two-year-old when she arranged for her to be adopted. (AP)

Game delayed 16 minutes

Brock runs down Wills' mark

ST. LOUIS (AP) — The record that Maury Wills has owned since 1962 and didn't think he'd lose while he was alive, is now the property of the speed demon of St. Louis — Lou Brock.

"I never thought it could happen to anyone," Brock admitted. "And now that it did, I'm glad it's over."

Brock's chase for 105 stolen bases at 90-feet a clip came to a record-breaking conclusion Tuesday night.

And it came in front of the hometown fans, where Lou Brock wanted it to happen.

The only aspect that diminished the accomplishment in the eyes of the St. Louis Cardinals star was his team's 8-2 loss to the Philadelphia Phillies.

"I'm glad to get it behind me, although I would like to have it happened when we won," said Brock to a horde of clubhouse reporters after he stole his 104th and 105th bases.

The thefts, both against Philadelphia right-hander Dick Ruthven, came in the first and seventh innings before a Busch Stadium crowd of 27,285 that was prepared for an historic happening.

Photographers and his teammates streamed onto the field and the game was delayed 16 minutes as Hall of Fame member James "Cool Papa" Bell and others saluted him.

"I want to especially salute the fans in left field," said Brock during the ceremony. "They probably knew I was going to steal 105 before I did."

Brock, born in El Dorado, Ark. has been the premier theft artist in the game for the past decade, winning seven National League base stealing crowns. His best performance had been 1966 when he swiped 74 of 92 bases.

At the end of May, with his club not quite a third of the way through the season, Brock had 30 thefts in 32 tries and by July 1 the pace was 48 for 53.

He swiped 17 more in July to run his season's total to 65, giving him 700 for his career, then ripped the throttle to full with 29 steals in 41 attempts during 30 Cardinal games in August.

His 105th came on his 134th attempt in the Cards' 142nd game compared to Wills' 104th in 117 tries during the Dodgers' 165th game in a 1962 National League playoff.

Wills, whose daring baserunning left its mark on the game even though his own cherished mark is now just second best, also toasted the new king.

"I never thought anyone would approach the record this soon, probably not in my lifetime," Wills added.

"I just feel that was my record. I was very proud of it ... I don't think anyone looks forward to seeing his own record broken."

Brock's two thefts also elevated him to a career record in the NL with 740 steals, surpassing Max Carey's 738 accumulated during the 1920s while playing with the Pittsburgh Pirates.

An intruder into Brock's memorable night, however, was the Phils' Mike Schmidt, who ruined the Cards with a two-run homer in the first inning and afterward slammed two run-scoring doubles.

The defeated also dropped the Cards 3½ games behind Pittsburgh in the NL East Division and sobered the thoughts of Brock, who was thrown out by Boone trying for his 106th theft in the ninth.

"I don't think that more numbers added to this are going to mean that much," he reflected. "I had been thinking in terms of the record, but the objective now is to catch the Pirates and win the pennant.

"I'll still play the same style I've been playing, but how much I steal will continue to depend on how badly we need it for our offense," he added.

"Surprise?" he responded when asked his impressions. "I would imagine I am as surprised as the average fan."

Raiders cut Kelly

Teams scramble to reach limit

By FRANK BROWN
AP Sports Writer

Some agonizing hours of suspense are over. Some National Football League careers are over.

And some are just beginning.

Tuesday's exodus from NFL training camps resembled the mass departure of tourists from their last weekend of summer vacation. With uncertain futures ahead, nearly 100 players — who missed that key block, dropped that clutch pass or fumbled once too often — left pro locker rooms for the last time.

No respect for the past was shown as coaches pared their rosters to the 47-player limit. One-time stars joined one-time scrubs in the classless society of the also-ran.

Running back Leroy Kelly became the fourth most productive rusher in NFL history with the Cleveland Browns. But the Browns put him on waivers early this summer and Kelly latched on with the Oakland Raiders.

But even he couldn't cut fast enough to avoid the biggest tackle of all Tuesday. Although the Raiders' policy is not to announce squad cuts, a list of 14 departures was compiled from men absent from Tuesday's practice.

Kelly's empty locker was silent evidence.

Green Bay Packers veteran center Ken Bowman, the team's player representative and an outspoken voice in the players association strike, was placed on the injured reserve list due to a back injury and won't see action this year.

The last of the original New Orleans Saints and another player rep, guard Del Williams, retired after he lost his job.

Ten-year veteran quarterback Pete Beathard suffered a similar fate at Kansas City's camp, but immediately signed with the World Football League Portland Storm. Another quarterback and WFL signee, Randy Johnson, was cut by the Giants, who then traded for Green Bay reserve signal caller Jim Del Gaizo.

The Pack then picked up quarterback Dean Carlson from Kansas City.

The Giants also dropped their player representative. Running back Charlie Evans was cut, along with backfielder Rocky Thompson. Of the 40 players on the roster when New York's season ended last year, 24 no longer are with the club and 18 rookies have new jobs.

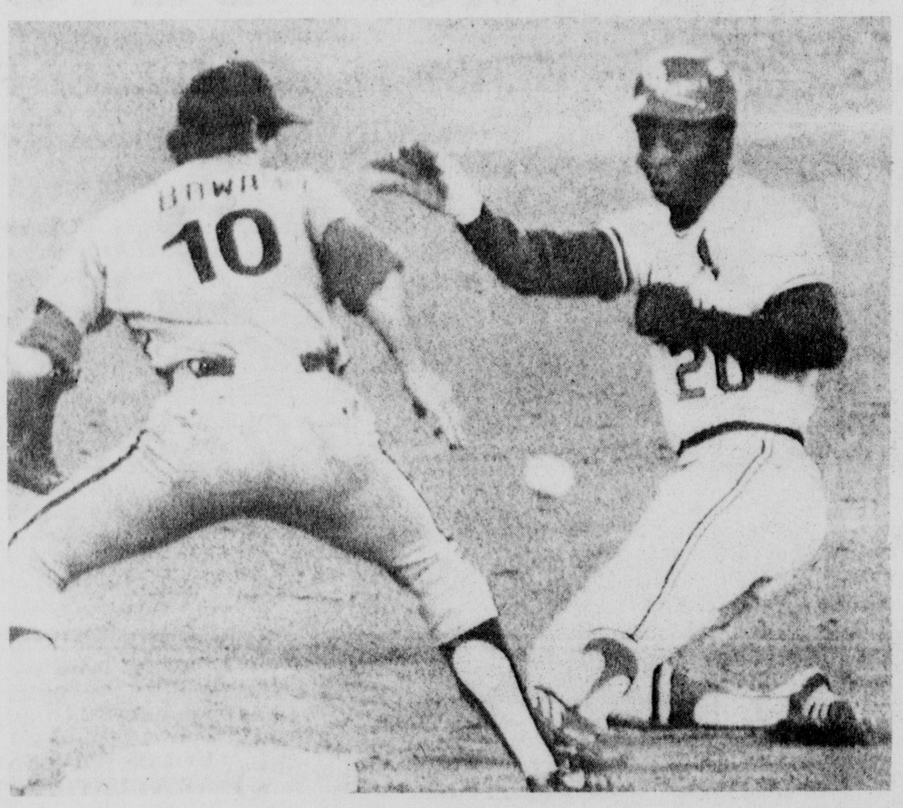

The Giants' cross-town rivals, the New York Jets, dropped safety Chris Farasopoulos, punter Julian Fagan, linebacker Rob Spicer and defensive tackle Joe Jackson. Eleven rookies made the Jets' opening roster.

Then there was more trading, which seemed as hectic as the wheeling and dealing on Wall Street.

The San Francisco 49ers sent punt return specialist Cecil Turner to the Philadelphia Eagles; the Minnesota Vikings swapped veteran defensive back Charlie West to the Detroit Lions for a draft choice; the Chiefs traded wide receiver Robert West to San Francisco for a draft choice, and the Dallas Cowboys acquired place kicker Mac Percival from the Bears for future considerations.

The Miami Dolphins waived wide receiver Ron Sellers and Dave Rather, another pass catcher, was recalled from waivers and traded to the Chicago Bears.

Brock beats throw, record

Lou Brock of the St. Louis Cardinals slides into second base just ahead of the ball Tuesday night to set the Major League record of 105 stolen bases in a single season. Philadelphia catcher Bob Boone made the throw to shortstop Larry Bowa (10). But Brock's speed couldn't match the Phillies, who won the game 8-2. (AP Wirephoto)

Forecaster sees Big 8 winning 6

By PICK M. WRIGHT JR.
Fearless Forecaster

Well, it's time for war again on the dirt and plastic-covered fields of America and all eight of the super conference (Big Eight) will be in action come September 14.

Leading the pack is the preseason Big Eight champion, or so everyone who polls anyone says, Oklahoma who will play Baylor. Not only is it a home game for the Sooners, but they will be testing this year's edition of offensive and defensive stars against a weaker Southwest Conference foe.

Last year the Okies demolished Baylor to the tune of 42-14, which doesn't sound like a bad score for this year, too. Sooner coach Barry Switzer stuck his neck out this week and said "The Baylor game is one which might be decided in the fourth quarter."

Either Switzer knows something the rest of the country doesn't or he is referring to the Baylor-Rice game set for November 30. I'm betting the Sooners win by 28.

The Sooners' counterparts in Stillwater likewise have an opponent which has not drawn raves. Oklahoma State plays host to Wichita State which has game experience from last week against New Mexico State, even if it is losing experience.

Oklahoma State lost a number of top performers from last year's disappointing season, but I can't see anyone in the Big Eight losing to Wichita State. No shock here, O-State 24, Wichita State 3.

In Lubbock, Tex., the Red Raiders of Texas Tech host the Cyclones from Iowa State. While ISU isn't the class of the Big Eight this year, they are no patsies with a tough stable of running backs.

Mike Strachan should make the Gator Bowl champions last year sit up and take notice, but Tech should prevail in a squeaker. Texas Tech by one point, maybe a 14-13 score?

Kansas State hosts the first of three straight home games against Tulsa who should put up a good fight against the Wildcats. However, K-State has its Big Eight honor to hold up something like it did last year beating Tulsa, 21-0.

This year may see a little more scoring when the two clash, but nothing outrageous. I'll take K-State by seven at 24-17.

The Big M of the Midwest will take on the former Big M of the South in Jackson, Miss., barring another return bout of Hurricane Carmen.

The Missouri Tigers will send its defensive-minded edition to the South to meet the Ole Miss Rebels, who lost to MU last year 17-0. While the Tigers have another superb defense planned for opponents, I don't think they will shut out the Rebels on their home field in a night game, which Missouri rarely plays.

Ol Mizzou will let a couple slip by in the lights but should prevail by at least eight points. Missouri 20, Mississippi 12.

The Kansas Jayhawks will also get a touch of nightlife in Spokane, Wash., as they continue an intersectional battle with Washington State.

Last year David Jaynes threaded WSU for 29 points while the KU defense only allowed eight points. This year the KU defense will be tough, but Washington State will score a couple for the homefolks.

That couple will be field goals, and KU will have to scrape up a couple of touchdowns out of its untested offense. If Scott McMichael can pass to his brilliant ends, Bruce Adams and Emmett Edwards it could be lopsided, but I doubt it. KU by 10, 16-6.

The best game in the Big Eight this weekend will be a showdown between the Colorado Buffaloes and LSU Tigers in Baton Rouge.

LSU had the upper hand last year with a 17-6 victory, but this year's game could end a tossup. While Colorado had a porous defense last year, new coach Bill Mallory will be trying to shore up his injury ridden defenders.

The Buffs scoring machine should be in good shape however, and LSU will have to prove its defense, which is traditionally very strong.

I say neither defense will be up to par on Saturday and LSU will please its noisy fans with a seven-point victory, 35-28.

Nebraska will enter the 1974 season hosting the Ducks from Oregon — with the Cornhuskers being a question mark right now. The question is really not who will win the game, but will the Big Red machine hone its fine edge of two seasons ago.

Oregon's defense is not to be taken lightly according to Husker coach Tom Osborne and "it will be one of the two or three best we will face all year."

However, any uncertainty on Nebraska's defense can be rectified with a humm. The offensive master for the past two years at Lincoln, David Humm, will be back this year to impress the pros with his golden left arm.

While Nebraska may not win the Big Eight there should be no lack of joy in mudville Saturday as the Big Red roll to a two touchdown win, 31-17.

Beathard, Carlson go

Kansas City Chiefs reach 47-player limit

KANSAS CITY (AP) — Quarterbacks Pete Beathard and Dean Carlson are no longer with the Kansas City Chiefs.

Beathard was placed on waivers and Carlson traded to the Green Bay Packers Tuesday and were among 14 players removed from the Kansas City roster, enabling the Chiefs to get down to the 47-player limit of the National Football League.

Larry Marshall, who sparkled as a kick returner the past two seasons, also was placed on waivers. Beathard has signed a contract with the Portland Storm of the new World Football League.

Carlson went to the Packers for an undisclosed 1976 draft choice. He was on the Chiefs' roster two years but did not play in a regular season game.

Several other veterans also were placed on waivers, Carleton Oaks, a defensive tackle; Jim "Cannonball" Butler, a running back, Pat Holmes, defensive end; Dave Smith, a wide receiver, and Mike Oriard, a defensive lineman.

Running back Jay Washington of Clemson, placekicker George Jakowenko of Syracuse and defensive end Walter Baisy, a free agent, also were waived. Washington and Jakowenko are rookies.

Wide receiver Billy Gambrell, linebacker Ceaser Belser and defensive end Norm Romagnoli were placed on the injured reserve. Gambrell has a back injury and Belser a broken hand. Both are veterans. Romagnoli, a rookie, has a broken arm.

The departure of Beathard and Carlson leaves the Chiefs with three quarterbacks, Len Dawson, Mike Livingston and rookie Dave Jaynes, an All-American from Kansas.

Of the 47 players now on the squad, seven are rookies, including six 1974 draft selections. Six of the rookies are offensive players.

The Chiefs now have 26 players on offense, 19 on defense and two on the specialty teams.

Multi-year pact

MILWAUKEE — Larry Costello, coach of the Milwaukee Bucks, which have the best winning percentage in National Basketball Association history, signed a multi-year contract to remain with the team.

Johnson homer does it

Yankees push AL East lead to two full games

By KEN RAPPOPORT
AP Sports Writer

Alex Johnson, acquired just Monday from the Texas Rangers, went to work on Tuesday night in a New York Yankee uniform and hit a game-winning home run.

"You have to get lucky sometime," said Johnson after his 420-foot belt in the 12th inning brought the Yankees a dramatic, 2-1 victory over the Boston Red Sox.

The tremendous blast gave the Yankees a two-game lead over both the Red Sox and Baltimore Orioles in the hot American League east race.

The Orioles lost a 6-5, 10-inning decision to the Milwaukee Brewers to fall into a second-place tie with the Red Sox.

In Tuesday night's other American League games, the Cleveland Indians bombed the Detroit Tigers 12-6; the Minnesota Twins beat the Chicago White Sox 8-7 in 15 innings and the California Angels trimmed the Kansas City Royals 8-2.

Johnson's game-winning blast, his fifth homer of the baseball season, came off reliever Diego Segui, 7-7. The victory went to Pat Dobson, 16-14, who won his sixth straight game with last-inning relief help from Sparky Lyle. Dobson gave up four hits in 11 innings.

The Yankees tied the game 1-1 in the ninth inning on a walk to Lou Piniella and a double by Chris Chambliss.

Brewers 6, Orioles 5

Sixto Lezcano singled home a run in the 10th inning to give Milwaukee its victory over Baltimore.

Johnny Briggs walked to open the Milwaukee 10th and moved to second on a bunt sacrifice by Bob Coluccio. Lezcano then singled to right to score Briggs with the game-winner.

Indians 12, Tigers 6

Cleveland reached Detroit's Mickey Lolich for five runs on six straight singles in the second inning and went on to beat Detroit.

Lolich, who had won his four previous decisions against Cleveland this season, retired the leadoff batter in the second inning before Buddy Bell, Joe Lis, Frank Duffy, Angel Hermoso, John Jeter and Gamble singled. That put Cleveland in front 6-2 and chased Lolich, 16-18.

Twins 8, White Sox 7

Rod Carew walked, stole second and scored on Larry Hisle's single in the 15th inning to give Minnesota its victory over Chicago.

Irish move to 2nd in college grid poll

By HERSCHEL NISSENSON
AP Sports Writer

Notre Dame's defending national champions climbed into second place in The Associated Press college football rankings today, closing in on preseason leader Oklahoma.

The Fighting Irish, No. 1 a year ago but third in the 1974 preseason poll, was the only member of the Top Ten to see action as the season got under way last weekend. Notre Dame defeated Georgia Tech 31-7 Monday night.

Oklahoma continued to lead with 22 first-place votes and 917 points from a nationwide panel of sports writers and broadcasters. Notre Dame received 17 first-place votes and 863 points.

Ohio State, which had been second, slipped to fourth with nine first-place votes and 802 points, one point behind Alabama, which received five firstplace ballots. Alabama was No. 4 in the preseason poll.

The rest of the Top Ten remained the same — Southern California in fifth place, followed by Michigan, Nebraska, Penn State, Louisiana State and Texas.

Notre Dame is idle this weekend but all other members of the Top Ten open their seasons.

The most impressive first-weekend winner was Arizona State, which clobbered Houston 30-9 and shot up from 15th to 11th. UCLA remained 12th after a 17-17 tie with Tennessee but the Vols moved up from 16th to the 15th position vacated by Arizona State, behind Pitt and Maryland, which repeated in the 13th and 14th spots.

North Carolina State climbed from 18th to 16th by trouncing Wake Forest 33-15. Idle Arizona remained 17th while Missouri, another idle team, was voted into the Second Ten as No. 18.

Houston, 11th a week ago, fell to 19th by losing to Arizona State while idle Arkansas and Stanford tied for 20th. In the preseason poll, Arkansas was 19th and Texas A&M 20th.

Spirits, Squires meet in preseason

ST. LOUIS (AP)—The Spirits of St. Louis has announced the addition of the Virginia Squires to its list of preseason American Basketball Association games.

The team said Tuesday that the Spirits will take on the Squires Oct. 9 at Bethlehem, Pa. The game replaces a match with the San Antonio Spurs in Dallas which was called off because of scheduling conflicts.

The Spirits are now scheduled to meet San Antonio, the Memphis Sounds and the Denver Nuggets twice each during the exhibition season and the Squires and the New York nets once.

Lahoud, Tanana team up on Royals

NAHEIM (AP) — Joe Lahoud has been bouncing in and out of major league dugouts since 1968 when he had a brief fling with the Boston Red Sox.

But he has never been what you could call a regular—until this season.

The California Angeles have given the 27-year-old outfielder the chance to perform on a daily basis and he has shown his appreciation in the best possible way—by producing.

Lahoud drove in five runs with a bases-loaded triple and a pair of singles Tuesday night as the Angels exploded for five unearned sixth innings runs to snap a 2-2 tie and defeat the Kansas City Roys, 8-2.

Lahoud's 3-for-3 night hiked his average to .283, the second best figure on the team.

Lahoud's rampage enabled rookie left-hander Frank Tanana to improve his record to 11-17 and defeat the Royals for the first time in four meetings this year. The win was also the first for California against Kansas City in seven games at Anaheim Stadium.

Lahoud and Tanana were probably the only two who really enjoyed the 2 hours, 44-minute marathon.

The loser was Dennis Leonard, making his first major league start.

Fred Patek's two-on, two-out throwing error enabled the Angeles to snap a 2-2 tie in the sixth and after a walk to Frank Robinson loaded the bases, Lahoud boomed a Lindy McDaniel pitch off the centerfield wall to clean them off. Lahoud scored the five run of the inning on Ellie Rodriguez' ensuing double.

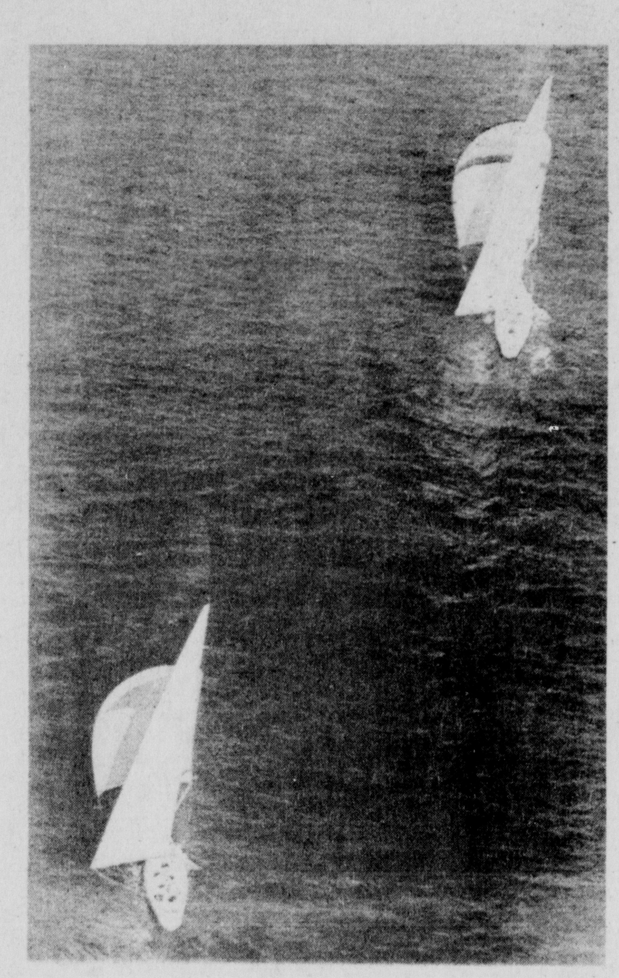

California got 13 hits including two each by Rodriguez, Dave Chalk and John Doherty.

Hal McRae and Al Cowens both singled twice for the Royals, who managed nine hits off Tanana and reliever Orlando Pena, who hurled the last two innings.

Cardinals trim roster to 47

ST. LOUIS (AP)—The St. Louis Cardinals have reduced their roster to the required 47 players by placing two players on waivers and another on the injured reserve list.

The National Football League team said Tuesday that fifth-year safety Chuck Detwiler and rookie defensive back and kicker Tom Gooden were waivered. Second-year running back Eddie Moss was added to the injured reserve list.

Courageous widens gap

Courageous takes lead in challenge

NEWPORT, R.I. (AP) — An Australian real estate promoter made it known months ago he would spend as much as $9 million to dislodge the America's Cup from the United States.

He also may use a few more strong words to go with his money, the words being aimed at the Yankee crew manning the Courageous, a boat that very well may send him home in frustration.

Alan Bond already has spent an estimated $6 million in his challenge to win the 123-year-old Cup, but in Tuesday's first race in a best-of-seven series his gold-colored Southern Cross went down in shocking defeat.

Courageous, with crack helmsmen Ted Hood and Dennis Connor in control, outdistanced the Aussie challenger by 4 minutes and 54 seconds in light wind and came home at least one-half mile ahead.

The two boats were to race the second heat beginning at 12:10 p.m. today over a 24.3-mile course located some seven miles offshore in Rhode Island Sound.

"We're not discouraged," Bond said after the first race. "The crew hasn't lost its confidence. We made some purely human errors, and we won't make them again in the next race."

But Bond saved his strongest words for Connor. He accused the American of shouting such phrases as "false start, false start" as the two boats maneuvered around the starting line.

"I don't know what he was trying to do, or to prove, but if he does it again, I'm going to file a protest," Bond promised.

Better sailing weather was expected for today's start. The forecast was for winds up to 16 knots, giving both boats a chance to operate at peak efficiency.

The start of the first race was delayed by heavy fog on Rhode Island Sound and the two yachts didn't get away until 2:10 p.m., the latest possible time they could have started under terms of the match.

The Americans have successfully defended the Cup 21 times since it was brought to this country in 1851 and over that time have won 67 races to only seven by all the challengers combined.

The Southern Cross was touted to be the most formidable challenger the Americans have had to face. But after the first one-sided contest, many veteran yachtsmen feel the Cup will remain in this country for another three years at least.

Pick Maryland to upset Tide

NEW YORK (AP) — With defending national champion Notre Dame already having opened its season, the rest of the Top Ten teams get a chance to play catchup this weekend.

Notre Dame's 31-7 triumph over Georgia Tech lifted the Fighting Irish from third to second in The Associated Press rankings and the 917-863 point margin is a little too close for comfort as far as No. 1-ranked Oklahoma is concerned.

"It could be decided in the fourth quarter," warns Barry Switzer of Oklahoma's meeting with Baylor.

No it couldn't, Barry. Oklahoma ... 42-14.

The 1974 forecasting began last week with a 14-4-1 record for a percentage of .778. Kent State's 21-14 triumph over Central Michigan was picked on the nose.

Notre Dame has this week off but No. 3 Alabama begins Bear Bryant's 30th season as a head coach — 17th at 'Bama — on the road against a Maryland team that has been picked in many quarters to win the Atlantic Coast Conference championship and is coached by Jerry Claiborne, one of Bryant's former players and pupils.

Bryant says he isn't happy with his team, and moans and groans like that generally portend an Alabama romp, but it says here this will be the first Upset Special of the Year ... Maryland 27-24.

Ohio State 49, Minnesota 14: The toughest contest for the Buckeyes might be the fullback battle between Harold Henson and Pete Johnson.

Southern California 28, Arkansas 14: John McKay says his offensive line "is not in condition to play" and poohpoohs the Trojans' role as two-touchdown favorites by saying the oddsmakers "must think I'm lying."

Michigan 56, Iowa 0: Big Ten athletic directors won't have to vote on this one. Hawkeyes lost all 11 last fall and waiting behind Michigan for new coach Bob Commings are UCLA, Penn State and Southern Cal.

Nebraska 38, Oregon 21: "They've put in the Veer and we're not sure exactly what we're going to see," says Nebraska's Tom Osborne. Oregon knows it will see plenty of Dave Humm's passing and Tony Davis' running.

Penn State 27, Stanford 13: When Joe Paterno sings the blues, his Nittany Lions usually play a mean tune.

Louisiana State 24, Colorado 14: It's not true that Eddie Crowder turned the Colorado coaching reins over to Bill Mallory because the schedule starts with road games at LSU and Michigan. How could you think a thing like that?

Texas 35, Boston College 14: Ready or not, Roosevelt Leaks won't play. "There's no way I'd dare put a guy in a game without any contact work," says Texas' Darrell Royal of his AllAmerican fullback. Hot-shot freshman Earl Campbell will take Leaks' place but the rushing star of the game could be B.C.'s Mike Esposito.

Other Games:

Auburn 38, Lousville 7; Memphis State 21, Southern Mississippi 14; Missouri 27, Mississippi 12; Drake 19, West Texas State 6; Illinois 28, Indiana 20; Kansas State 39, Tulsa 19; Michigan State 21, Northwestern 20; Oklahoma State 63, Wichita State 7; Purdue 28, Wisconsin 21; Texas Tech 28, Iowa State 27; Kansas 21, Washington State 18.

Boxing managers disagree on foes training methods

NEW YORK (AP) — The countdown has begun on what Muhammad Ali refers to modestly as "an event surpassing the moon landing."

In the final weeks of intensive training before leaving for Zaire, heavyweight champion George Foreman and challenger Ali displayed contrasting and highly individualistic approaches to their title fight on Sept. 24.

Foreman arose with the sun each day, donned sweat clothes and left his $175,000 split-level mansion in Livermore, Calif., for three to five miles of roadwork through the California wine country, often accompanied by Pasha, one of his three prize German shepherds.

Back at the house by 7 a.m., Foreman, who lives alone since his divorce, showered and went back to bed. He set the alarm for 10 a.m. Up once again, he devoured a breakfast of six eggs, thick slices of beef and Canadian bacon and huge draughts of milk and fruit juices.

While the heavyweight champion of the world settled back into his dreams, the man who would rob him of his sound sleep was awake and alert, 3,000 miles away, after completing a simliar ritual.

Ali, training since June 1 at "Fighter's Heaven," his camp in Pennsylvania's Pocono Mountains, usually napped after his morning run and then breakfasted on a mixture of orange juice and honey.

"I run by myself," Ali said at the time, "covering about five miles a day. I watch carefully to see if I'm less tired than I was at a certain point yesterday. And I think, always, of victory."

Both fighters arrived at their gymnasiums at 2 p.m. each afternoon.

Under the gaze of galleries of keen-eyed fans, each man underwent a two-to-three hour workout, warming up by skipping rope and pounding the heavy bag and speed bag.

Dick Sadler, Foreman's trainer, permitted his fighter to lift weights, but Angelo Dundee, Ali's trainer, frowned on such practice.

"No weights" said Dundee. "They give you bunchy muscles that make you tire quickly. Instead, Muhammad tones up with a series of isometric-type exercises."

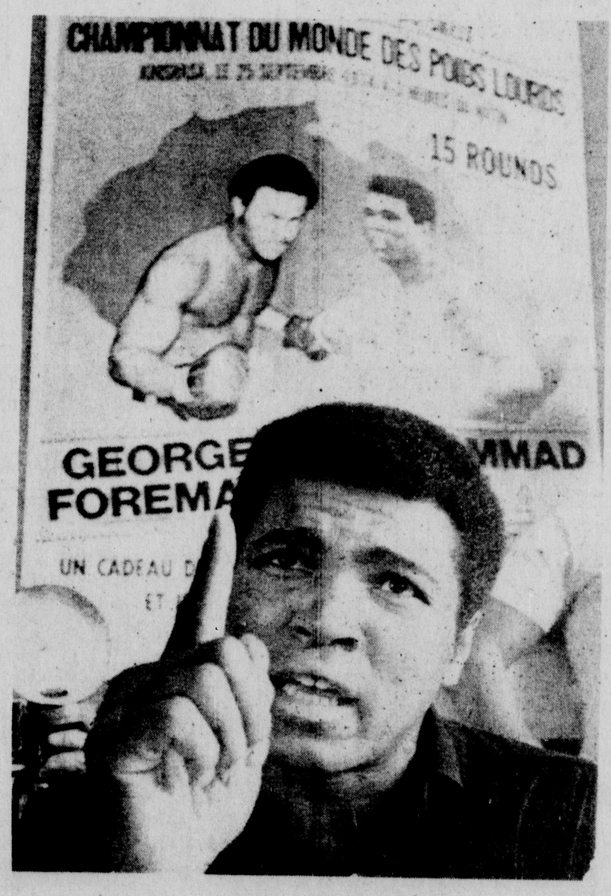

Throughly limbered by exercise and applause, the fighters then stepped into the ring for four rounds of sparring, usually with four different partners. In one of his final workouts at the Fair Grounds, however, Foreman boxed 18 rounds with 15 sparring partners, the temperature in his gym that day reached 101 degrees.

Ali's and Foreman's coaches disagreed on other training methods.

Foreman followed his workouts with a large meal of meat and numerous vegetables, whereas Dundee allowed Ali nothing but fish as the main course for his only meal of the day.

After dinner, the 25-year-old Foreman drove back to Livermore in his Excalibur. If Michi, his 2-year-old daughter, was visiting, he devoted his time to her. Otherwise, he loosened up by listening to soul music and romping with his dogs.

After the dinner dishes in the Fighter's Heaven mess hall had been cleared away, Ali often set up a video tape system and studied films of his opponents' bouts. Then he went home to his nearby motel suite to spend a quiet evening with his wife, Belinda, and their four young children, retiring "no later than ten."

And furthermore. . .

Muhammad Ali flew off to Kinshasa from Orly Airport in Paris Tuesday for his match against George Foreman, scheduled for Sept. 25. Above, Ali answers a question posed by a newsman during an interview before he departed. (AP Wirephoto)

Opening lead—K♣

By Oswald & James Jacoby

In the first Culbertson systems the jump raise to three of partner's suit was not quite forcing. Oswald Jacoby was one of a group of young experts who decided to play it as forcing. Culbertson followed along and today the jump raise is forcing in standard American.

The experts have gone back to using it as almost forcing and the chances are that within a few years the standard bidders will have changed back also.

Today's hand decided an important team match in a most unusual way.

The bidding in the box is that of the losing team. South decided to use Blackwood and settled for six when North showed just one king. Six is the right contract and South made it.

At the other table, South went into a series of complicated bids after the three-heart response. Eventually he landed in seven.

South won the club lead; ruffed a club; led a trump; ruffed his last club and ran all his trumps to wind up with one spade and three diamonds while dummy hung on to the ace of spades and three diamonds.

West had never thrown a diamond and East came to the mistaken conclusion that South had started with two spades and the ace-king of diamonds. He unguarded his queen of diamonds and the grand slam made.

Opening lead—K♣

By Oswald & James Jacoby

In the first Culbertson systems the jump raise to three of partner's suit was not quite forcing. Oswald Jacoby was one of a group of young experts who decided to play it as forcing. Culbertson followed along and today the jump raise is forcing in standard American.

The experts have gone back to using it as almost forcing and the chances are that within a few years the standard bidders will have changed back also.

Today's hand decided an important team match in a most unusual way.

The bidding in the box is that of the losing team. South decided to use Blackwood and settled for six when North showed just one king. Six is the right contract and South made it.

At the other table, South went into a series of complicated bids after the three-heart response. Eventually he landed in seven.

South won the club lead; ruffed a club; led a trump; ruffed his last club and ran all his trumps to wind up with one spade and three diamonds while dummy hung on to the ace of spades and three diamonds.

West had never thrown a diamond and East came to the mistaken conclusion that South had started with two spades and the ace-king of diamonds. He unguarded his queen of diamonds and the grand slam made.

Narcotics blitzkrieg reported

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Mexican-based machines that produce illegal amphetamines and the persons accused of peddling the pills in this country were captives or targets today of a blitzkrieg by federal narcotics agents.

Indictments returned by federal grand juries in 10 U.S. cities were opened at 12:01 a.m. EDT, the Drug Enforcement Administration (DEA) said. They named 125 suspects — most described as middle-class and in their 20s.

By 4 a.m. EDT today, 97 persons had been arrested in the United States and 25 in Mexico, an agent at the command center here said. More were expected in custody by later in the day.

Mexican authorities had no comment on their role in the probe.

"We're going to take out all the major people involved in this conspiracy," a DEA spokesman said, reiterating agency descriptions of the operation as the largest ever undertaken by federal drug agents and a crushing blow to illegal amphetamine traffic.

An hour after the indictments were opened, the spokesman said 61 men and women were in custody, including about 20 arrested in and near Milwaukee Tuesday and several seized earlier in Mexican cities.

He said the DEA would go to trial with "evidence exceeding 10 million tablets," all of it seized before the Tuesday midnight push by U.S. and Mexican authorities.

Eight Mexicans were arrested Monday in Tijuana, Mexico City and Guadalajara, a DEA official in San Diego said, describing them as suspected financiers, chemicals importers, machine operators and smugglers.

He said he did not believe Mafia figures in the United States were involved.

Among the key indictments noted by federal narcotics sources were those for two Latin Americans and a U.S. citizen in San Diego.

They are accused of importing "mini-bennies" from Mexico — small white tablets with a cross on them — and routing them to Milwaukee for distribution to Chicago and Denver, an official said.

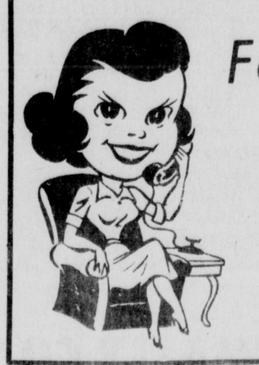

DEA officials in Boston, Chicago and Portland, Ore., denied that arrests were being made in their cities, as the headquarters announcement said. Washington officials said the 10 cities were the sites of indictments and arraignments — "the conspiracies are centered in those cities."

The other cities named were San Francisco, Phoenix, New York City and Charleston, W.Va.

DEA Administrator John R. Bartels Jr. said the arrests would destroy a network of drug-peddling conspirators he described as being solely responsible for an annual flood into the nation of 3 billion "pep pills."

The contraband pills, the "mini-bennies," were said by Bartels to generate street sales of $1.6 billion a year.

GRANTMASTER RADIAL TIRE GUARANTEE

1. 40,000 MILE GUARANTEE—Every new Grant radial tire is guaranteed by the W. T. Grant Company to give its purchaser 40,000 miles of tread wear if used on the vehicle on which it was originally installed, in normal highway non-commercial service. If the tread wears down to the 2/32nds" tread depth indicator before delivering 40,000 miles of tread wear, any participating W. T. Grant Store throughout the United States will replace the tire with an equivalent new tire on a pro rata mileage basis, charging the purchaser only for the mileage actually received.

Proper tire care is necessary to obtain maximum mileage from your radial tires. Your mileage guarantee is contingent upon taking your tires into a Grant store for free inspection and possible rotation every 5,000 miles and the proper completion of your mileage record by the adjusting store in case of a claim under this guarantee.

2. Tread Life Guarantee Against Road Hazards
We guarantee all Grantmaster tires against failures from all normal road hazards for the life of the tread with the exception of: ordinary nail punctures, tire theft, front-end mis-alignment, under-inflation, over-inflation and running flat.

3. Tread Life Guarantee Against Defects
We guarantee the Grantmaster tires, against all defects of material and workmanship, for the life of the tread.

Basis of Adjustment: Should your Grantmaster tire require adjustment under Section 1 or 2 of the Guarantee, please return it to Grants and we will replace it by giving you a proportionate allowance for the unused tread, based on the current selling price, including Federal Excise Tax.

This guarantee covers tires in passenger car service only. Passenger car tires used in commercial service reduce the guarantee period by 50%.

If the tread wears down to the 2/32nds tread depth indicator before delivering 40,000 miles of tread wear, any participating W. T. Grant store throughout the United States will replace the tire with an equivalent new tire on a pro rata mileage basis, charging the purchaser only for the mileage actually received.

Proper tire care is necessary to obtain maximum mileage from your radial tires. Your mileage guarantee is contingent upon taking your tires into a Grant store for tire inspection and possible rotation every 2,000 miles and the proper completion of your mileage record by the adjusting store in case of a claim under this guarantee.

2. Tread Life Guarantee Against Road Hazards

3. Tread Life Guarantee Against Defects
We guarantee the Grantmaster tires, against all defects of material and workmanship, for the life of the tread.

Basis of Adjustment: Should your Grantmaster tire require adjustment under Section 1 or 2 of the Guarantee, please return it to Grants and we will replace it by giving you a proportionate allowance for the unused tread, based on the current selling price, including Federal Excise Tax.

This guarantee covers tires in passenger car service only. Passenger car tires used in commercial service reduce the guarantee period by 50%.
